Review: Christian Science Monitor 22/9/65, 4; Illustrated London News 25/9/65, 24–25; Observer 19/9/65, 25. Comment: Eastern Nigerian Theatre Company. Part of the Commonwealth Arts Festival. Illustrated London News said both plays were “violently plotted, [and] reminded me hazily of Greek tragedy translated to a West African village idiom and not taking kindly to the change. Beside The Road [65.255] they seemed like primitives; they were not aided at the Scala by some frequently inflexible acting.” “Mr. Clark's plays are wholly indigenous and defiantly unsophisticated” (Times). The Masquerade was the sequel to the following item.

Plot: Hochman, Matlaw, Shank. Reviews: Illustrated London News 2/10/65, 34; Spectator 1/10/65, 409; Stage 23/9/65, 15; Times 21/9/65, 14; Tribune 24/9/65, 19. Comment: Tribune disliked Dürrenmatt’s dramaturgy, particularly the long speeches, but commended Lillias Walker’s performance; however, it castigated the remaining cast for the “cardinal sin of sending the play up.” Times praised Robert Macdonald’s “intelligent, perceptive” production, Alfred Burke’s Mississippi, and Colin Winslow’s imaginative sets.

65.263 Spin of the Wheel (P) Norman King. WIMBLEDON 20/9/65. 1st perfd Theatre Royal, Windsor, 28/9/64. Mark Sheldon John Gregson; Alice Sheldon Renée Asherson; Gil Sheldon Barry MacGregor; Lewis Sheldon Roger Rowland; Carol Patricia Shakesby; Betty Sylva Langova; Arthur Howard. Dir Hugh Goldie; Dgn Geoffrey Scott. Comment: The play was about a family distraught about a young son’s death and who was responsible for it.

65.264 The Four Seasons (D, 2a) Arnold Wesker. SAVILLE 21/9/65. Cast: Stage 23/9/65, 15; Variety 6/10/65, 70; WWT/14. Adam Alan Bates; Beatrice Diane Cilento. Pres Bob Swash; Dgn Zbynek Kolar; Light Michael Northen; Sm Michael Jackson. Comment: Observer praised Alan Bates’ performance, but little else. Christian Science Monitor described the play as “a threnody for two voices on the coming and passing of love,” and praised much of the writing; however, Wesker’s failing was he did not make the audience feel love. After exploring the play’s attributes and defects, Tribune concluded “this is Wesker’s most important play.” Illustrated London News thought the piece would not be remembered as among Wesker’s “big plays”; it was too faint, curious, and distant.

Comment: At three hours the piece was simply too long for Daily Mirror. Spectator recognized some the play's weaknesses but said the production was "full of plums." "Splendiferously cast" (Observer). Tribune called the play "an ingenious but dehumanised entertainment," and the production "a medley of competing solo turns." Illustrated London News thought that Alastair Sim's performance had raised Colonel Tallboys to the status of a leading Shavian part. Times maintained that Frank Dunlop's direction of the cast's innately variegated styles contributed "to a powerful ensemble." The first New York production (Guild 4/4/32) ran for 57 performances.

Part of the Commonwealth Arts Festival. Globe and Mail observed that Languirand "introduces Quebec patois to London audiences as he traces the violent history of the Yukon in a production showing marked Brecht influences." "Very turgid indeed, and this despite the fact that it is decked out with all the trappings of the 'epic style,' including lantern slides, dances, parades and even a burlesque of silent films" (Stage). Times also noted the Brechtian influence in this generally successful, if "indisciplined," production.

Comment: Received with "tumultuous and on the whole discriminating laughter" on opening night (Guardian). "Rare in being satirical but remaining incredibly funny" said Christian Science Monitor whose own review captures the essence of Flanders and Swann in performance. "Has evidently lost none of its power to please" (Times). Spectator was clearly not an aficionado.

Comment: "A delicious rendering" (Spectator). Tribune thought this one of the best Mermaid productions in quite some time, a sentiment reflected in Variety. "Don Taylor's production brings especially excellent performances by Timothy Bateson (outraged father) and three young players, Ellen Dryden, Adrian Reynolds, and Gwendolyn Watts" (Illustrated London News). Times opined the cast had captured Shaw's style, and noted Barbara Mitchell's Mrs. Gilbey brought down the house. The first New York production (Collier's Comedy 16/9/12) ran for 256 performances.

Comment: Spectator incorrectly called this “glittering” production the first public performance of the play. Tribune said John Gielgud’s direction was “ambling and ill-defined,” and the big name cast lacked ensemble performances; indeed, the production compared unfavorably with John Fernald’s at the Vanbrugh (see 65.123). Guardian singled out Claire Bloom’s performance as Sasha as “one of her best” so far, while Times declared Gielgud’s Ivanov “is a superb companion piece to his Hamlet.”

The piece was written as part of Hill’s M.F.A. degree at Yale. The piece and the performances were generally uneven, but “there was a splendidly oversize performance from Mr. Errol Jones as Diable Papa”

(Times). The piece was really a “play with musical interpolations, most of which were both apt and enjoyable ... [The play itself] though lacking some refinements of polish in construction, is interesting in theme and delightfully witty, both in dialogue and situation” (Stage).

The piece was also performed Traverse, Edinburgh, 24/8/65. “Astute and urban and moves fast” (Guardian). The “cast of [this] loitering, over-anxious revue ... would do well to go along to see what real professionalism can mean, and to learn just how and when to end a number” (Illustrated London News). “This prolonged undergraduate frolic scarcely justifies importation” (Times). “Throughout an awful evening of small boy humour ... I was cheered by one thought: the cast rarely performs outside Ireland” (Daily Mirror).

Comment: National Theatre. A successful production of one of Arden's best plays (Tribune). New Statesman reported Albert Finney had reversed the order of the first two scenes without Arden's approval. To which Spectator added: "But this is as nothing compared with the way [Finney] and Robert Stephens play truant with their parts from start to finish." "Some of the play I found slightly clumsy. Effects are not wrung easily from the planning of some early scenes," Left-Handed Liberty (65.167) is better (Guardian). Variety praised Finney's rearrangement and his "towering performance." Comment: English Stage Company. "Comes across as a slowly animated, rather dry, academic study of the rebel poet. And the production is also marred by the bleak settings. Ronald Pickup is a good Shelley" (Daily Mirror). "Mainly a dull and ponderous biographical sketch, old-fashioned in its construction and heavy-handed and prosaic in its writing" (Variety), a view echoed in Times and Guardian, the latter adding the piece was "flatly acted." Spectator found the first act enjoyable.

"Better than a poke in the eye with a sharp stick, but not much" (Spectator). "It doesn't jell and the joke is outdated" (Variety). Instead of "a deadpan presentation of events, [the adaptation] is continually nudging the audience into observing incidental absurdities" (Times).

Comment: National Theatre. Variety called it a “stunning production,” and praised both Peter Wood’s direction which “has added wit, gloss and a distinctive style” to the comedy and the cast’s performances. Guardian (21/10) disagreed about Wood’s direction. Tribune noted that Wood’s direction emphasized the “moral satire” he finds in the play. Times (21/10) thought the acting possessed “an Elizabethan vigour.” “Largely stripped of the artificiality” applied to Congreve, Wood’s production “has an intriguing freshness, direct realism being the dominant emphasis” (Stage 28/10). The production remained in repertory until 9/9/67.

Comment: Variety forecast a healthy run, particularly because of the casting of Rupert Davies as Maigret, a role he had performed in the BBC television series. “An utterly conventional whodunnit” (Tribune). “A well acted play, but sadly lacking excitement, tension and drama” (Daily Mirror). “A mild exercise in suspense” (Times).

Comment: English Stage Company. "This attempted satire of the British Secret Service is filled with bizarre dialogue and zany situations but played in the manner of a half-paced Goon Show" (Daily Mirror). Spectator was not particularly amused by the "spy gags, excellent in themselves ... but dead upon the lips of the actors." Guardian observed the friendly audience laughter provoked by the first act died out in the second: "this satirical extravaganza about counter-espionage had just not developed its promise." "Follows Ann Jellicoe's Shelley as a second sorry disappointment in the Royal Court's new season" (Times).

Comment: English Stage Company. A private, club production because of censorship (for details of the court case see Stage 7/4/66, 1). Guardian said “the series of squalid episodes is often intentionally flat, hysterical or mean, but ... it does add up to a positive and pathetic statement.” Observer (7/11) thought the play was “a sizeable testimony” about “brutishness,” although it was painful to watch. Tribune provided a careful analysis of the play and the issues, social and theatrical, which it raised. Times said the play provided “ammunition to those who attack modern drama as half-baked, gratuitously violent, and squalid.” “I cannot conceive how the script passed any vigilant play-reader charged to examine it for meaning and motive. Anything else aside, its narrative is rickety and its people utterly without interest. It is a needless play; no special pleading can make it appear otherwise” (Illustrated London News). Comment: Variety said the piece was really a series of unrelated revue sketches and was a “writeoff.” “An amiable failure accompanied by indifferent music” (Times). Illustrated London News noted that this “harmlessly insipid affair ... had to face a rattle of boeing mixed with friendly applause.”

65.322 The Tattooed Nude (Grotesque C) Gil Winfield. MERCURY 4/11/65.* Cast: Stage 11/11/65, 9. Hilary Pritchard, Peter Gale, Peter Carlisle. Reviews: Stage 11/11/65, 9; Tribune 12/11/65, 14. Comment: International Theatre Club. The play was about “a failed

Comment: Guardian declared the production “a huge success,” and observed that the first-night audience “kept breaking out into applause.” “A gentle, coherent comedy about a very ordinary Lancashire family ... Naughton’s ear for the Lancashire dialect is unfailing” (Christian Science Monitor). Other reviews offered similar opinions. At the New, tickets at “popular prices” ranged from 3 to 20 shillings. The first New York production, as Keep It in the Family (Plymouth 27/9/67), ran for 5 performances; the setting was changed to a town in Massachusetts in the late 1940s.

Comment: Irish Times thought the first act was somewhat confusing so far as Anouilh’s intentions were concerned, but the piece finally took off in the second act. Tribune thought the device of the dramatist appearing in the play at the beginning to explain he hadn’t finished it yet was too much of a game. “A great disappointment, with some fine acting talent going to waste” (Guardian). Times said the piece was “a stunning example of Anouilh’s technical wizardry,” but less passionate than Poor Bitos.

65.331a George Washington Crossing the Delaware (P, 1a) Kenneth Koch. KING GEORGE’S HALL 11/11/65. 1st perfd Maidman, New York, 1/3/62; 1st British perf. Plot: Vinson. Reviews: Stage 18/11/65, 17; Tribune 19/11/65, 15. Comment: Concord Theatre Group. “On the appearance of the Concord’s two plays I feel that they should reconsider before placing themselves in the withering glare of an audience again for some time”; this first play was “a crudely made charade on how Washington came to beat the British in the American War of Independence (Stage). Tribune thought that the group’s choice of these one-actors “did not so much disguise as make use of the group’s amateur status.”

65.331b In the Country of the Blind (P) K. G. Vandergrift. KING GEORGE’S HALL 11/11/65.* Reviews: Stage 18/11/65, 17; Tribune 19/11/65, 15. Comment: Concord Theatre Group. “A reworking of the Christ story, ends, untypically, with a condemnation of the murderers by the son of the murdered Christ figure” (Stage).

65.332 The Balcony (D, 2a) Jean Genet [trans Bernard Frechtman of Le balcon, 1960]. HAMPSTEAD 15/11/65. 1st perfd Arts 22/4/57. Plot: Bordman/4, 369, Fletcher, Griffiths, Hochman, Law, Matlaw, Mplots, Patterson, Salem, Shank, Shipley.

65.333 Fish Out of Water (C) Derek Benfield. INTIMATE 15/11/65. 1st perfd New, Bromley, 2/4/62. Comment: The play was about a vulgar widow intruding upon a group of English guests at a Riviera hotel.

65.334 Oh! Aphrodite (Musical thing) Tom Chatburn (bk, lyr, mus). LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 16/11/65. Cast: Stage 18/11/65, 17. Peter Farcet-Fenn Adam Deane; Freddy Fotheringay Lauriston Shaw; Tootle Sean Barry; Corporal Sam Bsiggr Madhav Sharma; Ariadne Jones Dinah McNaughton; Elizabeth Carol Neilis; Aphrodite Nancy Gabrielle; Galantina Carmen Woolf; Bobby Bright John McGivern; Jimmy Pumperley-Wilkes Ian Hinton; Bo-Bo Carmen Woolf; Tina Elizabeth Lyon. Dir Bil Keating; Sets Theo Oosterman; St dir Vanessa Kempster; Mus dir Tom Chatburn. Review: Stage 18/11/65, 17. Comment: The piece “shows what happens when the goddess Aphrodite is summoned from Olympus in order to work her powers on a queer mixture of Chelsea-ites, upsetting existing love affairs but winning for herself an old Chelsea Pensioner who returns with her to her Olympian home” (Stage).

65.335 The Platinum Cat (C, 3a) Roger Longrigg. WYNDHAM’S 16/11/65. 1st perfd Theatre Royal, Brighton, 25/10/65. Cast: Stage 18/11/65, 15; Variety 1/12/65, 64; WWT/14. Bernard Kenneth Williams; Caro

Comment: The production was withdrawn on 14/2/66 because Kenneth Williams, in the lead, became ill. Spectator said that when Kenneth Williams was not on stage this noisy piece wasn't worth watching. "Williams needs all his funny voices to get laughs" (Daily Mirror). "A comedy devoid of wit or originality, somewhat redeemed by the presence of Kenneth Williams" (Tribune). "There is no river of narrative, only another voice from Mr. Williams, possibly a new grimace. I do not deny his talent, but is it the kind of talent that can pad so thin a piece?" (Illustrated London News). Outdated and unjustifiable for production (Times).

Comment: National Theatre. Tribune's analysis placed Pinero's play in the theatrical tradition of both the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. A "well polished" and rewarding production, although scene shifting in full view of the audience seemed out of place (Guardian). Although a fine production, Times said that it had worked much better when staged at the Festival, Chichester, the previous July. The production remained in repertory until 10/12/66. The first New York production (Lyceum 22/11/1898) ran for 132 performances.

Comment: "Howarth's inquiry into loneliness in a small north-country town can be extremely touching, particularly, maybe, for those who recollect All Good Children, for which this is a companion" (Illustrated London News 4/12). Tribune commended some of the play's stylistic features, including "some skilful reworking of the lost arts of soliloquy and aside." New Statesman (28/1) thought the production at the St. Martin's seemed "thinner," but still praised the performances of Jill Bennett and Ian McKellen. Times (23/11) noted that Howarth's method was "oblique" rather than "explicit," and "his content and expression are exactly matched." There were 100 performances at the St. Martin's.

Comment: The production omitted act three. Spectator opined if Shaw were not revered in some circles, "Man and Superman is a case of the Emperor's clothes." For Times (24/11) the Arts production did not carry sufficient weight and failed to convey the play's "vitalist philosophy." The production gave Christian Science Monitor the impression Shaw "really means what he is saying." Variety noted the transfer to the Garrick showed the production was a box office draw, and praised the polished production and Alan Badel's performance. Of the latter New Statesman (14/1) commented that, with the transfer to the Vaudeville, Badel "has hardened his performance in the direction of Wildean polish instead of the cosmic tandem-jest Shaw intended." Illustrated London News noted that Badel's performance had been unsure in the first act at the Arts. The first New York performance (Hudson 5/9/05) ran for 192 performances.

Comment: The play was received enthusiastically on the first night (Guardian), and similarly on the second night (Irish Times). Christian Science Monitor reported Mildred Natwick received an ovation for her performance. Variety thought success was assured and noted Daniel Massey was the only non-American principal actor. Times commented on the value of the American tryout system and its success in regard to Simon's work. The first New York production (Biltmore 23/10/63) ran for 1,530 performances.

Comment: Guardian had every praise for the cast. Times found the production somewhat self-indulgent in its emotional emphasis but the cast gave “masterly performances.” “The four players, directed by Vivian Matalon, fit exactly into their pattern in that St. Louis apartment. I shall not forget Miss Massey’s sad silences and the flickering prattle of Miss Ffrangcon-Davies as the woman, the faded Southern belle, to whom silence is intolerable” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Times (3/12) expounded on the ways in which the show was geared completely as a star vehicle for Mary Martin. Unlike most of the audience Guardian refused to be astounded by the various elements of the musical, noting that, in fact, there is very little to the work. Similarly Observer (5/12) pointed out the whole reason for the show was “a single scene, a single song,” and, sung by Mary Martin, that was all the rapturous audience wanted. “A cinch for a long run and a handsome profit return on the $300,000 investment” (Variety). The first New York production (St. James 16/1/64) ran for 2,844 performances.

Comment: English Stage Company. Variety thought the production proved the play was worthy of revival and praised the “powering performance of Iain Cuthbertson.” Observer criticized the fumbling performances in minor roles, but declared “it is an essential revival of a very engrossing work.” Not so Spectator who opined that “muddle runs through the whole play and by the end has reached truly startling proportions.” Times reviewed the play’s stage history and Arden’s dramaturgy, but lamented the play lacked a “sense of dramatic direction.”

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. “Wordy and hard to follow” with “weedy” goody-goodies (Spectator). A “real play for real children” and a magnificent performance from Leo McKern (Tribune). McKern’s comic expansiveness lifts Bolligrew almost into the class of a classic children’s play” (Stage). “Bolt’s best play to date” (Times).

Comment: Guardian found the musical "baffling," full of clichés, and dramatically banal: "it will probably be a roaring success." "Everything is too haphazard: we seem to be listening to a raconteur who will not stick to the point, who lets his story trickle on" (Illustrated London News). Variety forecast poor critical reviews, but observed the piece was geared for "less sophisticated tastes," and there was the marquee appeal of Anna Neagle and Joe Brown; however, it was uncertain about a substantial success. Times faulted the multiple author approach to creating this lifeless show. Stage was not invited to review the piece (see Stage 16/12/65, 13).

Other short items were also performed. "A shaggy donkey had the key part ... and added a new, tender note to this fresh presentation of the Bethlehem story. Adam Bain was commendably clear as the boy David" (Stage).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Act one ran for 2 hours 30 minutes, act two 1 hour 10 minutes. David Warner's Hamlet "has become an original creation of the highest interest," but avoids the question of why Hamlet procrastinates (Tribune). Warner, "intelligent and intense, is seldom responsive to the sound of the lines. He does get us to listen to him; we are aware of his close study: but the poetry is just not there" (Illustrated London News). "A production of tremendous power and integrity, though it is plainly misguided" for dealing with the play "from the inevitably narrow standpoint of an existentialist dilemma" (Times). New Statesman provided details of changes in the production since its Stratford opening the previous August.

WWT/15. Mr. Bowhorn Peter Wyatt; Martin Davyd Harries; Miss Parlip Gillian Martell; Mrs. Farraclough Frances Cuka; Brimley Joseph Greig. Dir Jane Howell; Sets Charles Knode; Sm Robert Kidd. Plot: Weintraub. Reviews: Stage 27/1/66, 13; Times 24/1/66, 14; Tribune 28/1/66, 11. Comment: English Stage Company. Produced without decor. "Cregan has taken a favourite theme of Shaw's predatory women and marriage, and almost crushed it to death beneath the weight of all the unnecessary comments he has thrown in" (Stage). Times said the piece was shapeless but provided good opportunities for Frances Cuka and Gillian Martell.

66.18b Transcending (C, 1a) David Cregan and Robert Long (mus). COURT 23/1/66.* 1 perf. Cast: Findlater; Stage 27/1/66, 13; WWT/15. Mother Jean Boht; Father Bernard Gallagher; Girl Barbara Ferris; Mr. Lemster Roger Booth; Simon Ronald Pickup. Dir Jane Howell; Sets Charles Knode; Sm Robert Kidd. Plot: Vinson, Walford, Weintraub. Reviews: Stage 27/1/66, 13; Times 24/1/66, 14; Tribune 28/1/66, 11. Comment: English Stage Company. Produced without decor. "A domestic parable about a family and two friends who know all the answers about each other and themselves. Each character speaks pert little monologues about one or other of the five and, happily and with ease, categorises them" (Stage). Times found the piece very funny and noted Cregan's use of his favorite device, "the unexpected expression of literal truths."

66.19 You Touched Me! (RC) Tennessee Williams (adpt of D. H. Lawrence's story, 1920). INTIMATE 24/1/66. 1st perfd Playhouse, Cleveland, Ohio, 10/43; 1st British perf BBC TV 9/9/56; 1st British stage perf Arts, Belfast, 15/1/57. Plot: Heintzelman, Hischak, MacNicholas, Salem. Comment: The first New York production (Booth 25/9/45) ran for 109 performances.

Comment: Irish Times pointed out there was nothing really new in Miller's ideas about self-sacrifice, and was reminded of earlier plays such as The Only Way, and The Burgomaster of Stilemonde. Guardian found itself reminded of A Tale of Two Cities. Christian Science Monitor added The Breed of the Treshams to the list. Spectator defended Miller: "He has chosen an inflammable subject—the Final Solution—and cast it in a form which is reassuringly simple and familiar from Grand Hotel to Ten Little Niggers: a group of total strangers, flung together by circumstances, cooped up and subjected to pressure"; and also mentioned Sidney Carton. Times declared the piece was "not a major work. It is a one-act debate on the Final Solution."

66.21 The Philanderer (C, 3a) Bernard Shaw. MERMAID 27/1/66. 1st perfd Cripplegate Institute 20/2/05. Comment: Tribune thought the current "Shaw revival is now thoroughly out of hand," and only the major plays should be revived: The Philanderer was not one of them. Illustrated London News noted the prevalent evocations of the 1890s and thought the piece was lost on the Mermaid's large stage. Guardian reported Jane Arden had to be replaced by her understudy (Louida Vaughan) when the former was taken to hospital at the end of act one. Times said the production, despite Jane Arden's indisposition, compelled admiration for the play.

66.22 Hecabe (T, 1a) Euripides (trans Philip Vellacott). QUESTORS 29/1/66. 1st perfd c. 425 B.C. Cast: QTA. Plot: Gassner. Reviews: Middlesex County Times 4/2/66, 8; Stage 10/2/66, 18. Comment: While the handling of the Chorus was not entirely satisfactory, Stage commended highly “the gripping, movingly noble performance by Susan Mindelsohn, whose Hecabe would not have seemed out of place on any professional stage.”

66.23 The Prodigal Son (Mus) Lawrence Waddy (bk) and Bill Sutcliffe (mus). KING’S HALL 29/1/66. Comment: Negro Theatre Workshop.

Comment: Pop Theatre. Guardian said the production was full of “good intentions,” but the result was “comparatively abject.” “Betrays the content of the original novel with every cheap come-on and herd-making method in sight” (Observer). Tribune panned it. Variety was more receptive to the show’s “considerable vitality,” Frank Dunlop’s ingenious staging, and Tom Bell’s performance. “A coarse, violent play. Often it is violently funny: but far too often it drags” (Daily Mirror). “Compared with the original novel and subsequent screen version it is a crude and infantile piece of work” (Times).

Comment: National Theatre. Tribune praised the production and the cast’s performance, but condemned “the world of the Philistine, conventional emotionally cramped bourgeoisie” Feydeau wrote for, and the play itself. Guardian said that, for those who like farce, this was the “funniest Feydeau in English we have ever seen.” Spectator, Variety and other reviewers praised the translation and the excellent performances. The production remained in repertory until 27/1/70; see also 66.245.

Comment: An amiable but missable evening” (Observer). Tribune said the plot used stock characters, here the barmaid wanting to trace the father of her child, but it was “disarmingly simple.” Variety said the piece needed revision to warrant a West End transfer. For Times the play did not contain enough material to sustain a full evening’s entertainment.

Comment: Tribune saw no need for staging work written for and presented by another medium (television). Christian Science Monitor praised the play’s sympathetic treatment of the central character, Lennie, and Hywel Bennett’s “moving performance” of him. “If not a smashing play—it is repetitive and reveals its original television framework—it does develop a certain haunting quality, aided” by Bennett, Christine Hargreaves and Barbara Barnett” (Illustrated London News). Times said this stage version needed “more attention to the essentials,” and the production itself was “ineptly stylized.”

Comment: English Stage Company. Tribune pointed out the film of the play had resolved the deficiencies and defects of the original stage production, and thus there was no need for this stage revival. Spectator observed the director and cast did their best to mitigate the play's deficiencies. Variety opined that the play "may have been overpraised in its first stage presentation, that time has dated it as a sketchy one-acter pretentiously expanded." Times suggested a revival of The Sport of My Mad Mother would have been a better choice.

Comment: Guardian reported the production received a “vociferous reception,” but complained the piece was “almost incessantly rowdy and whining.” Variety noted Bill Owen’s sincerity in his book about women working in a match-making factory in 1888, but thought the plot was thin, and the musical had other faults. “The show has a recognisable conviction and its energy doesn’t seem confectioned” (Observer). Times faulted Owen’s book and lyrics: “They amount to a combination of agit-prop melodrama and the old music hall.” Illustrated London News expressed similar reservations about the piece, and opined Bernard Shaw would have provided the right sort of book.

Comment: A “middling good” version of a “feeble kind” of Broadway comedy (Observer). “Remains predictably in the familiar pyjama and dressing gown world of bachelor apartments and midnight misunderstandings” (Times). Irish Times said two-hander, one-set comedies were not exactly fresh, but this one was memorable for Diana Sands’ performance. Variety also praised her “blazing, extrovert vitality” as she repeated her Broadway success. The New York production ran for 427 performances.

Comment: Times found Sinclair’s adaptation inadequate and rather flat; David Hemmings gave “a spirited impersonation” of Dylan Thomas. “It is better to ignore the obvious theatrical limitations of this shred of comic autobiography and to admire James Roose-Evans’s art in getting its station buffet and its junk-crammed room upon the Hampstead stage. The night is rich in the presence of David Hemmings as the Dylan-figure” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Spectator declared the adaptation removed "all traces of Fielding's earthiness ... All in all a wicked waste of time, save for a passable Tom from Keith Barron." Variety reported that this was a limited-run filler and "a workmanlike and pleasantly amusing production" that paled in comparison with the highly successful film. "An artlessly literal transcription of Tom's adventures" (Times).

Comment: Czech National Theatre of Prague Company. World Theatre Season. The play is also known as From the Life of Insects. Guardian reported the piece had been revised somewhat, but it now seemed somewhat stale though amusing. Christian Science Monitor said the production resembled a revue and commended the “principal innovation ... to overarch the stage in slanting mirrors.” Tribune also approved the latter innovation. Times declared Miroslav Machacek had misinterpreted the play. Illustrated London News said the production lacked bite, but declared “the magician here is the designer, Josef Svoboda.”

66.84 Lilac Time (MP, 3a) Franz Schubert (mus; arr Heinrich Berté and G. H. Clutsam) and “Adrian Ross” [Arthur Reed Ropes] (lyr, bk; fnd on A. M. Comment: Swansea University Players. Times dubbed the production “a half-hearted stage-performance,” and believed that, as a radio play, it should be performed solely by voices. “Better heard than seen and it served little purpose to reveal two rows of people in black vests and jeans” (Stage). “The cast [is] protean: I think first of Eleanor Thomas, especially in dead Rosie's scene with the Captain where ‘I am going into the darkness of the darkness for ever’ so desperately moves” (Illustrated London News).

66.87 Macbeth (T) William Shakespeare. TOWER, CANONBURY, 23/3/66. Cast: TTC.

Plot: Gassner, Hochman, Salem, Shank, Sobel. Review: Times 29/3/66, 14. Comment: Centre Dramatique de l'Ouest. “What is so remarkable in this production is that not only the costumes and décor are modern, but the characters themselves, in their demeanour, gestures, manner of speech, personal relationships, and psychological make-up belong to the 1960s” (Times).

Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian noted Granville-Barker's association with the Court and the play's intrinsic qualities justified this splendid revival, two points expatiated upon by Times. Observer lamented the lack of appreciation for Granville-Barker's work, and said the company at the Court "does his play as he must have longed." Illustrated London News commended the performances of Sebastian Shaw, George Howe, and Gwen Nelson. Stage called it a "brilliant revival," but said Shaw wrote better plays.

"A compelling and forceful drama of barrack room life" (Variety). Tribune praised McGrath's talent, but discerned faults in the first act; nevertheless, "we have here an outstanding piece of work, and the acting is worthy of it," notably by James Bolam, Patrick O'Connell, Brian Murphy, and David McKail. "A play so gripping that it got a positive stranglehold over its audience" (Stage). Times offered advice on how a little more expository dialogue would have resulted in a shorter but no less effective play. Comment: National Theatre of Greece. World Theatre Season. Comment: Spectator thought the "company seems cramped, the acting rough-hewn, even a trifle crude," probably because it was used to performing outdoors in Greece. Times observed the production relied "mainly on the use of the tragic voice: an incantatory half-sung style of delivery whose most celebrated exponent is Katina Paxinou" playing Hecuba.

Comment: A limited fourteen-week engagement of Barbra Streisand. “Although overrated [Streisand] seems bound to prove irresistible to the uncritical,” and she can belt out a song (Guardian). Christian Science Monitor (18/4) echoed a complaint in Guardian about the use of microphones affecting the sound in the auditorium; further “there is nothing apparent ... to explain just why Funny Girl has acquired so enormous a reputation.” Variety wondered whether the show would continue after Streisand’s engagement ended, and noted the production was virtually a carbon-copy of the New York one. Christian Science Monitor (2/5) recorded when an understudy replaced Streisand for a matinée performance, 400 people left the audience and demanded their money back; the understudy was “booed and jeered” until an American in the audience shouted ‘Give the girl a chance.’” The first New York production (Winter Garden 26/3/64) ran for 1,348 performances.

Comment: Performed under the title Suite in Three Keys (see also 66.128a-128b). Variety thought the reappearance of Coward on the West End stage for the first time in many years would assure the success of the production. Observer criticized the characters and their dialogue, “burdened with limp retorts and dead adjectives.” Christian Science Monitor, and others, noticed Coward was now “not averse to moving into territory which the new playwrights have opened up.” Times noted this was the first time since 1947 Coward had performed in one of his own plays in London. The first New York production, as Noel Coward in Two Keys (Ethel Barrymore 28/2/74), ran for 140 performances.

Comment: Leslie Phillips was originally cast as Clancy Pettinger but dropped out during tryouts when his role was reduced; he was replaced by Barrie Ingham. The production lost £43,500 (OTF). Guardian averred the frenzied style of the production “suits this kind of high school hokum.” Christian Science Monitor also found the work “vigorous” and exhilarating.” “A musical both ingenious and impetuous. It fizzes with energy” (Illustrated London News). “A physically lively but somewhat exhausting evening” (Variety). “Sets a new standard for idiocy” (Times).

Comment: This combination of a revolting predatory mother with transvestism, sadism, and incest “had the biggest and most enthusiastic reception of any entertainment of the last 12 months” (Christian Science Monitor). The play “keeps going, for one reason, because we all hate Mum so much that nobody would willingly leave the theatre without seeing her demolished” (Illustrated London News). Variety predicted some success for the piece while noticing MacIlwraith’s “flair for offbeat characterization and a facility for funny and penetrating dialog.”

Comment: Performed under title Suite in Three Keys (see also 66.116). Times commented on the unifying elements in the trilogy, including use of the same set. Guardian said these two short pieces did not "measure up to the theatrical excellence" of A Song at Twilight, and apart from the setting and the casts, there was nothing to link them together. Observer expressed a similar, if somewhat more positive view. Tribune found the whole trilogy unwatchable because the characters were unbelievable on any level. The first New York production, as Noël Coward in Two Keys (Ethel Barrymore 28/2/74) ran for 140 performances.

Comment: Polish Popular Theatre Company. World Theatre Season. Guardian praised the production for bringing the play to life in a relevant way, a feat enhanced by the “stylish and lively company.” However, Christian Science Monitor was disappointed by this “pretentious play,” and its performance. Spectator agreed. “An old-fashioned, almost brashly vigorous production swirling perhaps too tirelessly round the revolving stage” (Times).

Comment: National Theatre. “Notably superior to the Abbey Theatre presentation in the West End several seasons ago,” with “fluid, imaginative” direction by Laurence Olivier (Variety). Observer discussed how Olivier had successfully placed the play in the British theatrical tradition. Guardian declared it a magnificent, triumphant production, with splendid performances by Joyce Redman, Colin Blakely, and Frank Finlay. Irish Times was more measured in its approval. Times averred the play needed Dublin accents and found this production somewhat uneven. The production remained in repertory until 8/10/66.

Slender plot, effective acting from David Tomlinson and David Hutcheson (Variety). Spectator thoroughly recommended the piece and “the excellent frugality of the construction.” A comedy with “limited ambitions” and the intention to please (Times).

Comment: Polish Popular Theatre Company. World Theatre Season. “The production is an odd mixture of the symbolic and the realistic, with the usual scaffolding, hurdy gurdy music, cross lighting, and scrim walls” (Guardian). Spectator said the adaptation rambled and muddled the story. Times noted the adaptation was “confined almost exclusively to Raskolnikov himself and his inquisitor, Inspector Porfiry.” “Strongly acted and staged, it can yet be untheatrical” (Illustrated London News).

The play was about the problems of Harlem in New York. “Mr. Hubert is a kind of Harlem Everyman, a middle-aged, underpaid, unskilled citizen who wanders through the streets and bars of the city searching for a kindly word, a little encouragement which will enable him to feel a purpose in life” (Stage). Times said the Company deserved better plays than this “rambling, bitty tale.”

Comment: Polish Popular Theatre Company. World Theatre Season. “A crowded, involved documentary play about the Warsaw rising of August, 1944” (Observer). Observer noted the filmic qualities of Adam Hanuszkiewicz’s direction: he “strips the stage to make a kind of open-ended studio where spotlights stab and jump-cut like cameras from close-up to filmic close-up—clenched hands, anguished faces.” “One appreciated the merits of the cast—its decision and honesty—while finding it hard to get involved in the version of Roman Bratny’s novel. What shape the book may have is lost in the theatre” (Illustrated London News). “A lethargic and unilluminating evening” (Times).

The adaptation lasted eighty minutes. "Wildly pop ... The basic fault with the whole thing is that Mr. Marowitz has more ideas and theories than the allotted time can accommodate" (Stage). "Would it not be better to stage Shakespeare's play (a rather good one) instead of the chaotic 80-minute mish-mash under the same title, put together as a director's exercise?" (Illustrated London News). "'I despise Hamlet,' explains director Charles Marowitz. 'He is a slob.' Shakespeare, Marowitz has urged elsewhere, can well be purged of reason and compassion. We're left with coarsened Fellini, circus make-up and bad dreams, the actors used as puppets, the words as sound effects" (New Statesman).

Comment: Guardian found the first half of the piece enjoyable "on a revue sketch level" thanks to Vanessa Redgrave's performance. "Redgrave's performance is a glorious genteel tumult, the woman herself in every clearly defined consonant, every dramatising attitude" (Illustrated London News). Spectator approved both the adaptation which was better than the novel itself and the performances of the cast. "By ordinary standards it is a pretty sharp and intelligent piece of social observation and character portrayal," but not in the same league as Happy Family (66.156) (Tribune). "An immaculate Edinburgh high comedy ... preserves the essence" of the novel, with fine performances and direction (Times).

Comment: Leningrad Gorky Theatre Company. World Theatre Season. Guardian (10/5, 5) reported the logistical difficulties the company had encountered, notably the scenery being too large for the Aldwych stage. Guardian (10/5, 9) described the production as idiomatic but "still a shade dodgy." Times reported the production ran three-and-a-half hours, the result of an effort to encompass as much of the novel as possible: "the result is not a shapely play."

Comment: Leningrad Gorky Theatre Company. World Theatre Season. “A delightful and impressive production ... about the possible nature of a classless society” (Tribune). Observer approved the company’s Chekhovian acting but thought the play was little more than “affectionate comic-strip” episodes about Georgian life.

Comment: “Tate with modest diffidence and complete success rewrote it in the decorous style of the 18th century, eliminating the Fool, binding Cordelia and Edgar in a sentimental love-knot, and bringing the play to a happy ending. This version was the only one seen in the theatre throughout the century” (Stage).

66.161 The Spies (C) Leon Griffiths. RICHMOND 16/5/66. Peter Wyngarde, Bernard Bresslaw. Dir George Murcell. Comment: A “cold war comedy.” A two-week engagement.

Comment: The Alberts were Anthony and Douglas Gray, with Bruce Lacey as a third member. “As a 10-minute revue skit it might get by, but not as a full evening’s entertainment” (Variety). “It is a right old load of Anglo-Saxon rubbish” (Daily Mirror). This pantomime version “shows, however, that [the Alberts’] humour, inventive though it be, is fairly shallow stuff. Its basis is the banana skin, the explosion, the rude noise on a brass instrument, coupled with a healthy ridicule of most theatrical conventions and many social ones” (Stage). “These chaotic comedians, once very funny in An Evening of British Rubbish, manage to be inexpressibly tedious” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: English Stage Company. Christian Science Monitor commended William Gaskell for controlling the “phantasmagoria of scenes” with admirable smoothness and simplicity.” Tribune (20/5) agreed. Variety thought this political tract would appeal only to the predisposed. Times noted there were splits “between vision and reality ... throughout the play” which resulted in “a good deal of confusion, sometimes creating effects that were never intended.” “At the end, even if we can recognise the irony, the personal tragedy, of an old man betrayed by one party and blandly patronised by another, it has been a dull enough progress. Wesker, we imagine, wants to be a poet, but he cannot express himself” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Trevor Nunn took over the lead at the last minute when Dudley Sutton fell ill. "A brilliant, often savagely funny play," well acted (Observer). Times felt the play's message was somewhat incoherent and the play was "not funny enough." "A fascinating play, with a memorable ending, when Eddie leads a sinister dance with middle-aged Eugene, who emerges as a horrible pawn of corruption and power. Pauline Jameson, Patience Collier, Robert Eddison, and Peter Jeffrey all give excellent performances" (Stage).

Comment: Guardian criticized the acting for rendering the production ineffective. However, Tribune said the production was unsurpassable. Despite aspects of the play being dated, Times opined, incorrectly, that the production "should be assured of a long run." Stage said the piece was currently inappropriate because Shaw's "attack on private medical practice has lost some of its virulence with the passing of the years and, more particularly, because of changed social conditions."

Comment: Performed twice nightly at 6:10 and 8:45 at Mermaid. Variety doubted the production would transfer to the West End, where, in fact, it proved successful. Times (3/6) declared it was "the most polished and well-cast show I have yet seen at the Mermaid." "It is so blithely cast and directed that one can merely cry ... Ha! ha! That's admirable!" (Illustrated London News 11/6).

Comment: English Stage Company. Produced without decor at the Court; a limited three-week engagement at the Comedy. Guardian said the unconventional aspect of the play was the plot: “Boy loves Boy and after a tiff seduces Boy’s Mother.” “An astonishing first play by a young author ... [written] with spontaneity and understanding that normally come from much greater experience” (Times). Some reviews expressed various opinions on the nature of the homosexuality of the two male characters. See also Hampton’s rebuke of the Spectator review (Spectator 15/7/66, 80).

Comment: National Theatre. “The play left much unexplained, left much apparently unfelt” (Guardian). “Osborne seems to have gone to work more in a spirit of self-indulgence than of reinterpretation” (Times). Guardian (9/6/66, 1), Variety (15/6/66, 67), and Tribune reported Osborne’s anger about the cold reception his work had received from reviewers. The production remained in repertory until 1/2/67.

Comment: “Compulsive, full of odd suspense ... marvellously acted by Derren Nesbitt and Wilfred Brambell” (Guardian). Tribune objected to the arbitrary violent climax. “This play won first prize, out of 500 entries in a competition in Chicago; and it is terrifying to think of the 499 others that were worse” (Times). The New York production ran for 16 performances.

Comment: New Shakespeare Company. Times described Michael's Meacham's production as "altogether enchanting." Illustrated London News appeared to be indifferent. "Michael Meacham deserves enormous credit for his genuinely imaginative direction of a play full of traps for the unwary, especially under open-air conditions, for if ever an open-air production deserved the blessing of fine, warm evenings, this one does" (Stage).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. The original novel was published in 1954. Performed without an interval and running nearly two hours, the play was about a garrulous mother and her memories of her son's childhood. Peggy Ashcroft gave a "stunning" performance as the mother (Observer) in what Tribune called "less a play than a monologue." "Though not a good play—its anecdote is too diffusely treated ... [it] has at least an overwhelming part for Dame Peggy Ashcroft" (Illustrated London News). Times drew an analogy between the play and "watching changing cloud formations, and unless one can accept it on those terms it will appear repetitious and frail." The first New York performance, as Des journées entières dans les arbres (Ambassador 6/5/76), ran for 11 performances.

Comment: A music-hall view of Victorian and Edwardian England. Times praised Charles Lewsen's performance: "a youngish, lean party with a wonderfully mobile face and a rakish roll of the tongue." Lewsen seemed nervous at first "but by the end of the show he had slipped in and out of character with expertise and ease. His singing [was] raucous rather than tuneful" (Stage).

Comment: Guardian doubted that the novel could ever be made into a good play. "The less said, the better" (Observer). "A neat, stage-worthy, and reliably cast adaptation" (Times); Daily Mirror agreed. "Not a very dull play, but it lacks almost everything that has made Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice so highly valued for so long" (Stage).

Plot: Bordman/4, 420, Hochman, Matlaw. Reviews: New Statesman 8/7/66, 63–64; Observer 3/7/66, 20; Spectator 8/7/66, 45; Stage 30/6/66, 13; Times 29/6/66, 7; Tribune 8/7/66, 15. Comment: New Statesman discussed the links between Soyinka and Wilson Knight's The Golden Labyrinth, and noted an addition to the text of the play. Tribune commented on the connected social concerns of Soyinka and Fugard, and said "Soyinka is a superb phrase-maker." Times called Soyinka "an extremely sophisticated craftsman working within a rich folk tradition." The first New York production (Greenwich Mews 9/11/67) ran for 115 performances.

66.213 The Blood Knot (D, 7sc) Athol Fugard. Comment: Producer Peter Bridge had intended to close the production on 16/7/66; however, the cast agreed to work for the Equity minimum of £15 a week to keep the show on (Stage 21/7/66, 1). On the failure of the production and also its similarities to The Matchgirls, see Variety 20/7/66, 63. "It is more imaginative and vigorous

[than The Matchgirls]. The production as a whole goes with a swing, there are some excellent settings by Disley Jones, rollicking dancing attractive music by Gordon Caleb and quite strong dialogue, at least for a musical, by Joyce Adcock, who wrote the book" (Stage). "The Matchgirls was a realist entertainment with a strong line in agit-prop melodrama. Strike a Light is simply a comfortable commercial production that has no great concern with values or realism" (Times). Illustrated London News pointed out the piece did not pretend to be an historical document and praised the production which "has an exhilarating breadth and attack," preferring it to The Matchgirls. "I found Strike A Light! more colourful and more tuneful than its predecessor but the story came over with less heart" (Daily Mirror).

66.218 Bread and Butter (P) C. P. Taylor. JEANNETTA COCHRANE 7/7/66; 8/8/66. 1st London perf. Comment: London Traverse Theatre. Guardian thought neither the direction nor the cast measured up to the quality of Taylor's text. Tribune (8/7) was unsure what Taylor's purpose was, and suspected that Michael Geliot didn't either. Times thought the play worked best as "an extremely touching comedy of a lifelong friendship."

Comment: International Theatre Club. Tribune opined the play was less tiresome than Anouilh who has written similar plays in a similar style. "Words are used in a purely Firbankian manner for their own sake. Great chunks of dialogue seem to be obvious gibberish—witness the set speeches about non-existent philosophers and philosophies" (Stage). "An extravaganza that might almost have been written in French by N.F. Simpson with the aid of the ghost of Ronald Firbank ... a night of words, words, words, and very amusing they can be" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: The plot was full of "the inevitable contrived situations," but the pace is too leisurely; noteworthy was the appearance of Clarkson Rose making his first West End appearance after an absence of over fifty years (Variety). Times agreed that Rose's presence in the cast was the only thing that lent distinction to the production. "A weary commercial farce which is unforgivably offered at the Arts Theatre. It's far more tiresome than Anouilh" (Tribune). "I can't recall another comedy which had me so frozen-faced for three acts. What a pity, for there are some talented people involved" (Daily Mirror).

Reviews: Globe and Mail (Toronto) 12/7/66, 13; Stage 14/7/66, 14. Comment: Theatrescope. "This brief tragedy has a setting and feeling reminiscent of Riders to the Sea and, with the aid of much poetical imagery in which the forces of nature are related to the human body, tells the story of two women and their relationship with the older woman's seafaring son" (Stage).

66.225 Saint Joan (P) Bernard Shaw. Plot: Heintzelman, MacNicholas, Walford. Review: Stage 14/7/66, 17. Comment: Actors' Workshop. "The three plays were early examples of Mr. Williams's work and showed all the elements which one thinks of as being typical of him. In each play there was some seed of one of the later plays" (Stage).

Comment: The opening was postponed to this date because Glynis Johns suffered an injury during a rehearsal. "Little more than an extended revue sketch perhaps, but it is not a dud" (Guardian). "An incredible hash of English history ... all very dreary stuff" (Christian Science Monitor). Variety agreed that history was mangled but was more concerned that the blend of farce, comedy, and drama did not succeed. Times said Glynis Johns's performance was "much the best reason for seeing the show."

Comment: English Stage Company. Variety suggested the pantomimic style of the production tended to obscure the piece's more serious ideas. Observer thought the production marked "the coexistence of the private argot of goonery with the in-jokes of pop art," the latter in David Hockney's set designs. Spectator (29/7) averred the play was really Iain Cuthbertson's because much of it ignored Jarry's instructions and had rewritten the text. Times said Max Wall simply molded Ubu to fit his own "accustomed mannerisms" which might please Wall's fans but did not fit Ubu's real style.

Comment: The play was a boon for amateur dramatic societies (Observer). Variety declared the production was a surefire winner because of the casting of Honor Blackman. "A stagey but competent thriller" (Tribune). "Well-made and admirably functional" (Times). "We ought, I hold, to be frank and to admit that a good thriller can be worth a dozen nights of glum and muddled maundering. Wait Until Dark is an absorbing exercise in suspense" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Guardian was unimpressed by the play's "stale irony and second rate sardonic 'humour.'" Observer entertained similar reservations. "Heavy, pretentious, pompous" (Christian Science Monitor). Variety was somewhat more forgiving, noting the possible appeal to the Aldwych's usual audience, and commended Clifford Williams' direction and Patrick Magee.

Comment: The piece was only "mildly amusing" and really a "gimmick show" with a computer as the "star" (Variety). "A prolonged embarrassment" (Guardian). A "laborious amalgam" of various jokes (Irish Times). "A heavy-handed satire on bureaucracy" (Tribune). "As a whole, the comedy sets up expectations which it does not satisfy" (Times).

66.240 Four Degrees Over (Revue) David Wood and John Gould. MERMAID 31/7/66; trfd to FORTUNE 15/9/66.* Cast: Stage 4/8/66, 14; WWT/15. David Wood, Bob Scott, John Gould, Adele Weston. Pres W. Comment: Given two performances at the Mermaid on Sunday 31/7/66 at 3:00 and 7:30; 68 performances at the Fortune. Variety thought the piece was entertaining as "an undergraduate romp," but Observer wondered whether it would have been staged in the West End if the four performers had gone to Keele University instead of Oxford University. "Seems destined to become a success this autumn if some enterprising management find a comfortable West End home for it" (Stage). An "insipid piece of juvenilia" (Times).

66.241 A Severed Head (D, 3a) Iris Murdoch and J. B. Priestley (adpt of Murdoch's novel, 1961). WIMBLEDON 1/8/66. Plot: Bordman/4, 398, Bull/1, Fletcher, Hirschak, Loney, Salem, Vinson.

Comment: The play still "gives rise to some splendidly actable scenes" with good acting from the company (Guardian). "A powerful and well constructed drama" but perhaps too contrived (Christian Science Monitor). Variety said the play survived "the passage of time" and was very well acted by Gillian Lewis, Brian Oulton, and Peggy Thorpe-Bates. Times drew comparisons between Pinero's play and the recent Court revival of Granville-Baker's The Voyage Inheritance (66.109). The first New York production was at the New 12/11/10.

66.245 A Flea in Her Ear (F, 3a) Georges Feydeau (trans John Mortimer of La puce à l'oreille, 1907). Comment: National Theatre. Times noted the piece was "played with even greater energy and speed than" the previous February at the Old Vic (66.36).

66.246 An Inspector Calls (P, 3a) J. B. Priestley. HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 8/8/66. 1st perfd Kamerny, Moscow, 6/8/45; 1st British perf Opera House, Manchester, 9/9/46. Plot: Best/47, 286, Bordman/4, 269, Demastes/1, DeVitis, 200–4, Dorney, Fletcher, Griffiths, Hirschak, Hochman, Kabatchnik/2, Law, Loney, 248, Matlaw, Mplots, Patterson, Salem, Shank. Comment: The first New York production (Booth 21/10/47) ran for 95 performances.

66.247 Jorrocks (Mus, 2a) Beverley Cross (bk; based on R. S. Surtees, Jorrocks' Jaunts and Jollities, 1838, and Handley Cross, 1843) and David Heneker (mus, lyr). WIMBLEDON 8/8/66.* Cast: Stage 28/7/66, 1. Comment: The pre-West End production prior to opening at the New in September (66.298). A two-week engagement.

66.248 Rattle of a Simple Man (C, 3a) Charles Dyer. RICHMOND 8/8/66. Cyrenne Julie Paille; Percy Alan Downer. Dir Alan Vaughan Williams. Plot: Best/62, 208, Bordman/4, 388, Fletcher, French/2, Hirschak, Loney, Salem, Vinson, Weintraub. Comment: A two-week engagement.

66.249 Adam's Apple (C) Terence Feely. HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 15/8/66. 1st perfd Opera House, Manchester, 11/7/66. Cast: Stage 2/6/66, 8. Adam Bill Simpson/Kenneth Seeger. Dir Philip Grout; Dgn Loudon Sainthill. Comment: On 16/8 Bill Simpson collapsed on stage during the second act and was hospitalized; his understudy Kenneth Seeger completed the performance. A projected transfer to the Saville on 25/8/66 was cancelled because of Simpson's continued indisposition.

66.250 The Interview (P) J. P. Donleavy. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB c. 15/8/66 (Ln). Cast: Stage 18/8/66, 8. Alan Scarfe, Stephen von Schreiber, Ronald Rubin, Lynn Thatcher. Dir Vincent Guy Plot: Vinson. Comment: A part of Fairy Tales of New York.

66.251 Murder After Hours (Thriller) Gerald Ball and Aubrey Danvers Walker. INTIMATE 15/8/66. 1st perfd Repertory, Shanklin, 13/9/65. Comment: A murder mystery involving the murder of a stripper.

Reviews: Stage 18/8/66, 13; Tribune 26/8/66, 11. Comment: "Perpetuating the myth of the American desire to be loved is an arid subject for a play, even a one-acter, yet this is what appears to be at the core of" this "boring" piece (Stage). "As well as some rather too deliberate 'frankness,' there's convincing psychological portraiture" (Tribune).

66.254 Public and Confidential (C, 3a) Benn W. Levy. DUKE OF YORK'S 17/8/66. 1st perfd Festival, Malvern, 26/7/66. Comment: Observer, Spectator, and Tribune found the plot too intricate and/or confusing. Variety found additional faults, and opined it was "a questionable box office prospect," though the names of the dramatist and cast might attract some playgoers. For Times the play was merely "an updated version of The Right Honourable Gentleman."

66.255a It's My Criminal (Melo) Howard Brenton. COURT 21/8/66.* 1 perf. Cast: Findlater; Stage 25/8/66, 13; WWT/15. Mike Oliver Cotton; Georgie William Stewart. Dir Ian Watt-Smith. Reviews: New Statesman 26/8/66, 298; Stage 25/8/66, 13; Times 22/8/66, 6; Tribune 26/8/66, 11. Comment: English Stage Company. Produced without decor. "A sort of 'Slight Bellyache' straight from the sub-Pinter basement" (Tribune). "An overlong piece of utterly shapeless and appallingly bad writing. A play in the modern manner which derives from Pinter, but lacks both his technique and brilliance” (Stage). An “obscure allegory” (Times).

66.255b The Ruffian on the Stair (C, 1a) Joe Orton. COURT 21/8/66. 1 perf. 1st perfd BBC Radio Third Programme 31/8/64; 1st stage perf. Cast: Findlater; Stage 25/8/66, 13; WWT/15. Joyce Sheila Ballantine; Mike Bernard Gallagher; Wilson Kenneth Cranham. Dir Peter Gill; Setting Jessica Gwynne. Plot: Demastes/2, Fletcher, Hirschak/2, 6, Walford, Weintraub. Reviews: New Statesman 26/8/66, 298; Stage 25/8/66, 13; Times 22/8/66, 6; Tribune 26/8/66, 11. Comment: English Stage Company. Produced without decor. “The play contained some brilliantly funny, and perceptive, lines but they also contained an overwhelming feeling for the feelings of the odd and the lonely” (Stage). Tribune thought the main value of this funny play was as a precursor of Orton’s later successful work. Times faulted Orton’s characterizations.

66.256a The Bespoke Overcoat (P, 1a) Wolf Mankowitz [find on Nikolai Gogol’s story, “The Overcoat,” 1842]. RICHMOND 22/8/66; trfd to HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 5/9/66. 1st perfd Arts 25/6/53. Plot: Vinson, Walford. Comment: The company for this double bill David Kossoff, Howard Goorney. Dir David Scafe. A two-week engagement at the Richmond.

66.256b The Dock Brief (P, 2sc) John Mortimer. RICHMOND 22/8/66; trfd to HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 5/9/66. Plot: Fletcher, French/2, Hochman, Loney, 310, Matlaw, Patterson, Vinson, Walford, Weintraub. A two-week engagement at the Richmond.

66.257 Breakfast in Bed (Yorkshire C) Jack Popplewell. INTIMATE 22/8/66. 1st perfd Princes, Bradford, 11/2/57. Comment: The arrival of an apparently rich American uncle provokes displays of greed in a family.

66.258 A Share in the Sun (P) Terence Kelly and Campbell Singer (adpt of Kelly’s novel, The Carib Sands, 1964). HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 22/8/66. 1st perfd New, Oxford, 15/8/66. Comment: The pre-West End production prior to opening at the Cambridge in August (66.268).

Comment: London Traverse Theatre Company. Directed as a “straightforward, old fashioned weepie” (Spectator). Tribune discussed how both plays were bad plays from an English point of view, indicating how the French might think otherwise. Times commended staging the two plays as a double bill because they almost formed a single play.

66.260b The Square (P) Marguerite Duras (trans Barbara Bray of Le square, 1956). JEANNETTA COCHRANE 25/8/66. Cast: Stage 1/9/66, 13; WWT/15. The Girl Amanda Reiss; The Man Paul Gillard. Dir Milo Sperber; Dec Ian Knight. Plot: Hochman. Comment: “Almost quaintly unsophisticated, containing a lot of unfunny film slides with a dull linking commentary” (Daily Mirror). “A sort of song-along offering a pleasant evening” (Variety). Nothing more than a collection of Porter’s songs in chronological order (Times). The New York production ran for 273 performances.

66.262 A Family and a Fortune (D, 2a) Julian Mitchell (adpt of Ivy Compton-Burnett’s novel, 1939). HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 29/8/66. 1st perfd Yvonne Arnaud, Guildford, 26/7/66. George Benson, Rosamund Greenwood, Raymond Huntley, Joyce Carey. Plot: Brock, Fletcher, Gassner, Hochman, Holzknicht, Patterson, Shipley. Reviews: Observer 4/9/66, 23; Stage 1/9/66, 15; Times 31/8/66, 6; Tribune 23/9/66, 11. Comment: National Youth Theatre. Tribune thought the play was "well suited to young players," and the performance was good. Times credited Paul Hill's production for its "general pace, clarity, and inventiveness," despite a tendency to exaggerate horseplay.

66.265 Early One Morning (C, 2a) Glyn Jones. ARTS 30/8/66. 1st perfd Civic, Chelmsford, 18/11/63. Cast: Stage 1/9/66, 13; Times 31/8/66, 6; Variety 14/9/66,66; WWT/15. Ian Trevor Bannister; Sheila Jill Browne; Mr. Appleby Pamela Sholto; Julian Jonathan Holt. Dir David Poulson; Dgn Bruce Palmer; Sm Angela Collins. Reviews: Stage 1/9/66, 13; Variety 14/9/66,66. Comment: The plot involved a young wife being picked up by a young male rebel. Variety thought the piece needed revision. "A sketch stretched to full-play length, rather thin, occasionally witty, sometimes astringent in social comment" (Stage).

66.266 Four Nights One Summer (P) Stuart Gilman. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 30/8/66. Cast: Stage 25/8/66, 14. Jane Oehr, Michael Gilman, Edward Langdon, Marc Farren. Dir Joan Campbell.

66.267 Pictures in the Hallway (Reading) Sean O'Casey (adpt Paul Shyre of O'Casey's autobiography, 1942). MERMAID 30/8/66. Cast: Stage 1/9/66, 15; Variety 14/9/66,66; WWT/15. Annette Crosbie, James Ellis, Denys Hawthorne, Barry Keegan, Peggy Marshall, Jan Norton. Dir Peter Duguid. Plot: French/2, Salem. Reviews: Irish Times 2/9/66, 7; Stage 1/9/66, 15; Variety 14/9/66,66. Comment: Irish Times said the production fell halfway between a reading and a full-blown production, and was generally commendable.

66.268 A Share in the Sun (CD, 2a) Terence Kelly and Campbell Singer (adpt of Kelly's novel, The Carib Sands). CAMBRIDGE 31/8/66. Cast: Stage 8/9/66, 13; Variety 21/9/66, 64; WWT/15. Barman Charles Hyatt; Roy Schuster Alan Gifford; Ellis Petersen Michael Culver; Leo Messner Ron Randell; Rachel Strowger Margaret Robertson; Ferdie Bax Larry Cross; Arnold Frank Singuineau; Robert Hudson John Bentley; Mrs.

Comment: This piece about a hotel in the Caribbean was "devoid of interest, wit or humour" (Guardian). However, Variety said it was entertaining and had "reasonable box-office potential." Illustrated London News thought it was acceptable for those who like boardroom dramas, and was somewhat surprised to find Jessie Matthews in the cast. Times dubbed it a competent boardroom melodrama.

Read. Plot: Bordman/4, 418, French/2, Fletcher, Hirschak, Vinson, Weintraub. Reviews: Birmingham Post 2/9/66, 4; Illustrated London News 10/9/66, 30; Observer 4/9/66, 23; Stage 8/9/66, 13; Times 3/9/66, 6. Comment: The role of Arthur is "the meatiest part this superlative actor [McCowen] has found for years, and he plays magnificently" (Observer). Bowen "has in Vivian Matalon, the director, and a cast headed by Alec McCowen (self-appointed divinity with a thin Cockney voice and a blistering gaze) the precise quality of interpretation" (Illustrated London News). "Witty, intellectually nourishing, and dramatically effective ... a powerful fable with distant echoes of The Lord of the Flies" (Times). The first New York production (John Golden 9/10/67) ran for 64 performances; Alec McCowen repeated his performance.

Reviews: Daily Mirror 6/9/66, 6; Guardian 20/8/66, 3; Stage 8/9/66, 13; Times 6/9/66, 12. Comment: National Youth Theatre. A revival of the company's 1965 production (65.241) that "relies entirely on the faithful, intelligent delivery of the text" (Times). "There is a handsome sweep to the whole production, in which skilful lighting and sometimes quite opulent costuming have an integral part," and with fine performances from Helen Mirren and Clive Emsley (Stage).

Comment: The piece comprised letters from soldiers of the German 6th Battalion before its annihilation at Stalingrad 2/2/1943. Times noted this was the first presentation of a “new ‘theatre of fact’ movement.” “It is a most impressive production, poignant, terrible, tragic in its truthfulness and actuality. James Roose-Evans must be praised highly for his staging” (Stage). Nemiroff’s play was produced at the Brooks Atkinson, New York, on 1/11/65, and ran for 8 performances.

Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian said the piece lacked “a strong theatrical impulse,” although the production itself had merits. Observer agreed, and described the piece as “a string of sketches with intellectual cross-talk peppering the gaps.” However, Christian Science Monitor called the production the “most striking event” since the first production of Pinter. Times compared the play with Under Milk Wood but said it suffered from being “cruelly overloaded with events, among which it is hard to distinguish the significant from the decorative.” Daily Mirror said the play failed: “Not for lack of funny lines, for those there are in sparkling plenty. Not for lack of acting talent, for playwright Cregan is served superbly by his cast. The play fails because it is a little too clever. It goes way out in an unexplained direction. And as a result, gets nowhere.”

"In some respects a little rough and ready, and the unfolding of the play is some times faultily integrated. Yet the whole has such drive and passion, such a rich sense of comedy, and such largeness of style and scope, that it sweeps one up continually" (Stage). Times opined that Frank Dunlop's direction did "little to assist the play's magic."

Comment: Variety was disappointed by the revival, which lacked "sparkle," but predicted a profitable run because of the "standout cast." For Irish Times the best part of the production was Margaret Rutherford and Ralph Richardson, the rest was "not very much livelier than a charade, opulently dressed and staged in eighteen century styles." However, Guardian was pleased. Times regarded the play as "foolproof" and requiring "no more than mechanical competence" to be successful in production. "This is Old Comedy in the Haymarket tradition; and the West End is the happier for it" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Ron Moody was the sole author of the Bristol production. "The Joey of the title is Grimaldi the clown. and it is notoriously difficult to restore the semblance of a great comedian to an age long afterwards" (Birmingham Post). While favorably disposed towards the piece, Guardian said the songs and music did not "make a strong impact." Variety, unlike some reviews, said Ron Moody failed to "capture the essence" of Grimaldi, but did acknowledge his "talent and versatility." Times found much of the production conventional but said Timothy O'Brien's sets, "blown up black and white photographs of eighteenth-century London," were the most original feature.

Comment: Spectator delighted in all aspects of the production and drew particular attention to Cecil Beaton's designs, as did Daily Mirror. "Mrs Erlynn has the most theatrical chance, and Coral Browne, with the costumes of Cecil Beaton to aid her, offers a full swirl and sweep ... For me the major performances of Anthony Quayle's production are those of Isabel Jeans, whose Duchess has the shimmer and dazzle of her own diamonds, and Wilfrid Hyde White" (Illustrated London News). Tribune said the production functioned well as a star-vehicle.

Comment: National Theatre. Observer called John Dexter’s direction “misconceived” in its attempt to render the play “Hardy-esque” and reduce much of it to a “crowded Dickensian canvas of provincial grotesques and types.” Christian Science Monitor was puzzled why the National had staged such an old-fashioned melodrama. “A snail-paced funeral rite” (Spectator). As with many reviews, Variety could only commend Josef Svoboda’s designs. The production remained in repertory until 14/4/67.

Comment: A new version. Tribune recognized Spike Milligan was sui generis and thus “beyond praise or criticism ... there can never be a second Milligan.” “It has an atmosphere and flavour all its own, stemming from its application of Goon-type humour and vaudeville cross-talk to the urgent matter of human survival” (Times).

Comment: English Stage Company. “Why Alec Guinness and Simone Signoret find themselves involved in this revival is beyond my understanding: their natural styles are disconcertingly at variance with William Gaskill’s production” (Tribune). “The strangest revival I remember: certainly the worst production—it seems inconceivable that it was allowed to get by—and yet one with a Macbeth so potentially fine that we must regret all the more his wretched environment” (Illustrated London News 29/10). Guardian (21/10) enjoyed only Guinness’ verse speaking. Spectator found some aspects to commend: Christopher Morley’s designs, Guinness, three black actors cast as the witches, but not Gaskill’s “panicky gimmicks,” and certainly not Simone Signoret. Times (21/10) called Gaskill’s direction “uncompromisingly Brechtian” and said it lacked an “expressive purpose.” On 19/11/66 Susan Engel replaced Simone Signoret with Times (23/11) calling Engel’s performance “arresting.”

Comment: The Chichester Festival production seen in June 1966. Observer was unhappy with the play, "the familiar tearful Anouilh earful about the impurity of this wicked world," but commended the acting of John Clements and John Standing, also commended by Christian Science Monitor which, however, found the play entertaining. "A play which pulls at the heart-strings yet is never slushily sentimental; a play which bubbles with humour and ideas; a play with deep compassion" (Daily Mirror). Variety was uncensorious, and said it was a "potential hit." "Norman Marshall's production is extremely alert to atmospheric changes and solidly based on the harlequinade convention" (Times).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. The play was "received with rapture" on opening night, with excellent performances from Patrick Magee and Paul Scofield (Guardian). Observer recounted numerous realistic details of the production, notably props, language, and the box set, which vivified the play. Spectator said the play was trite but the performances excellent. Christian Science Monitor, registering a minority view, thought Dyer was critical of his characters. Times called the play the "male counterpart to The Killing of Sister George, and said "the main excitement of the production is in the playing." Comment: A something-for-everyone show featuring Frankie Howerd and Cilla Black, but far too long (Guardian). Variety was enthusiastic, particularly about Howerd—"a major box-office draw in London." For Times the production existed "only when Mr. Howerd holds the stage alone, fixing someone in the third row with a reproving glare, or diverting a plain tale into wildly inconsequential arabesques."

Cast: Stage 17/11/66, 7; WWT/15. Martin Clark Richard Coleman; Irene Spencer Geraldine Hart; Janet Westley Brenda Cowling; Miss Eckersley Ann Way; Danvers Peter Dennis; Richard Tyler Lindsay Campbell; Phil Clark Irene Sutcliffe; Palmer Edward Dentith; Knowles Michael Dentith; Doctor Fletcher Keith Pyott. Dir Anthony Woodruff; Sm Jane Thornton. Review: Stage 17/11/66, 7. Comment: Repertory Players. The play involved two partners who invent perfect murder plots for other writers.

66.357 Arsenic and Old Lace (C, 3a) Joseph Kesselring. HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 14/11/66. Plot: Best/40, 165, Bordman, Bordman/4, 198–99, Bronner, Bryer, Fletcher, Hischak, Hochman, Kabatchnik/2, Law, Loney, 226, Patterson, Salem, Shipley, Wilmeth. Comment: The Vaudeville production (66.53), which ended 12/11/66, on tour.

66.358 The Bear (F, 1a) Anton Chekhov (anon trans of Medved, 1888). ARTS 14/11/66 (Ln). Smirnov Chris Tranchell; Pamela Buchner. Dir Brian McGellis. Plot: French, Hochman, Matlaw, Walford. Review: Times 15/11/66, 14. Comment: Quipu. “An ideal choice for a lunch-time production,” although this was a poor one (Times).

66.359 The Glass Menagerie (P) Tennessee Williams (abridged Vernon Morris). LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 14/11/66 (Ln). Cast: Stage 17/11/66, 6. Comment: About the life of Houdini. Observer said this was a routine musical which missed what was a more interesting psychological explanation of Houdini’s life, including his “devouring Jewish mama.” Variety thought the piece was sketchy and episodic, the best section being the staging of some of Houdini’s tricks. “A thoroughly enjoyable entertainment” (Christian Science Monitor). Times welcomed it as “a standard show business story.”

66.362 Justice Is a Woman (D, 3a) Jack Roffey and Ronald Kinnoch. VAUDEVILLE 16/11/66. 1st perfd Theatre Royal, Brighton, 17/10/66. Variety 30/11/66, 56. Comment: Not much of a thriller, but with a good performance from Constance Cummings as a barrister (Observer). Variety thought favorably of the piece except for an implausible climactic scene. Spectator agreed with both views. For Illustrated London News it was “an excellent example of the Theatre of Escape.”

66.363 Belcher's Luck (CD, 2a) David Mercer. Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Observer detailed Mercer's indebtedness to the ideas and values of D. H. Lawrence. Variety said the play itself was somewhat obscure, but it was staged well and with some excellent performances. Spectator condemned the “outlandish” dialogue, “grotesque” plot, “gummy” stagecraft, and the “ill-written” tirades “in the main, atrociously badly delivered.” While Tribune admired the production it pointed out defects in Mercer's dramaturgy, such as characters that are “too articulate ... products of dramatic convenience.” “The text is littered with self-cancelling clues” (Times). Comment: Guardian, Illustrated London News, and Observer raised the question of whether the theatre was really the appropriate medium for such “Living Theatre” pieces. Times respected Michael Hastings's “discipline and concern for the truth” but thought an imaginative treatment of Oswald would have been better for the stage.

Comment: Variety noted

the piece was “somewhat Anglicized, the setting has been transferred to London,” and some characters altered. “A suburban, lounge-hall comedy” enlivened by David Tomlinson’s performance (Guardian). Illustrated London News declared the piece was implausible and tiresome. Times was amazed that audiences willingly sat through such patent nonsense. The first New York production (Playhouse 13/10/65) ran for 670 performances.

66.371 The Homecoming (D, 2a) Harold Pinter. TOWER, CANONBURY, 25/11/66.  Cast: TTC. Plot: Demastes/2, Dorney, Fletcher, Hischak, Hochman, Law, Loney, Matlaw, Patterson, Salem, Shipley, Vinson, Weintraub.

Review: Stage 15/12/66, 14. Comment: "Inevitably the play has begun to date, but it still hurts and, therefore, it is still vital. Douglas Heap's realistic setting seemed familiar. It could only be the Porters'. Heinz Bernard directed on what one might call traditional lines" (Stage).

Comment: English Stage Company. African Ijinkle Company. Quite well received on opening night, although the acting was "indifferent" but might well improve (Guardian). "A mild and artless Nigerian comedy, with an occasional good line, a few dances, and a cast-endearing, I agree— that offered a drowsy charm instead of technique" (Illustrated London News). Tribune was bored by this "fable of interminable length." Countering other reviews, Observer declared and discussed why "Soyinka's parable of progress in a Nigerian village is the most sophisticated spectacle in town," a point of view elaborated by Times.

66.387 The Martians (P, 1a) Keith Johnstone. LITTLE

THEATRE CLUB 12/12/66 (Ln).* Johnny Wade, John Muirhead. Dir Richardson Morgan. Review: Stage 16/2/67, 13. Comment: Theatrescope. "Consists of two sets of conversations between master and slave on the subjects of possession and sex, the first being an excuse for the second when a phantasy about beings from another planet leads into a series of sexual images of phallic symbolism offering a mental form of physical perversion" (Stage).

66.388 The Snow Queen [(P for children) Noel Langley]. INTIMATE 12/12/66.

This reworking of the Jonah story was "the kind of show that might be devised by a go-ahead Church of England vicar" (Times). "Its staple was honest-to-goodness preaching, a didactic pill sugared with nothing but a sense of theatre. And superbly theatrical it proved to be" (Tribune). Guardian said the play was a failure, "having nothing much to say and saying it fussily."

Comment: “It has lithe-some Julia Lockwood playing Peter for the fourth time, and Ron Moody making his debut in the dual roles of Mr. Darling and Captain Jas. Hook. Mr. Moody demonstrates a flashing left hook but brings a welcome touch of comedy to the villainy, too” (Daily Mirror). New Statesman observed that “lower-income groups were well represented” in the audience. A traditional production that needed to cut the three-hour running time “which is obviously too much for younger children” (Times).

66.395 The Ballad of the False Barman (P) Colin Spencer and Clifton Parker (mus). Comment: “An adults-only pantomime ... a sort of Alice in the Underworld, a brothel fantasy of canting thieves and transmuted moral standards” (Guardian). An “second excursion into Gothick kinkery and one hopes that the management’s appetite for it is now satisfied” (Times).

Comment: An established "annual favourite ... with some cunning scenic transformations" effected by the revolving stage (Times). "There are some excellent punch-ups and knife fights with tomato ketchup liberally smeared over the buccaneers. Visually, this production ... has a lot to offer youngsters. But Long John Silver, as played by Bernard Miles, is more rustic than roistering" (Daily Mirror)

Comment: A lavish production with advance sales of nearly $600,000 (Variety). The production combined a traditional respect for the story with the introduction of two "television comedians and a pop singer in the star parts" (Times). "All said, Albert J. Knight, the director, has done a most ingenious job in the magical-pictorial-nonsensical. Traditionalists may miss one or two things" (Illustrated London News).

66.398 The Land of Green Ginger (P for children) Noel Langley (drm of Langley's book, 1937). ARTS 20/12/66 (m). 1st stage perf. Cast: Stage 5/1/67, 12. Reviews: Stage 5/1/67, 12; Times 21/12/66, 5. Comment: Unicorn Theatre. The piece was popular with children because it was initially a six-part series broadcast on BBC Radio Home (began 28/11/66).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. "Roly-poly Roy Kinnear, looking like a pudding about to boil over, is the wicked but whacky Baron ... The play features such delights as a smoke-belching dragon, a magician with a comic line in spells and a couple of catchy songs" (Daily Mirror). "A classy show" (New Statesman). Times thought the piece would probably become "a regular Christmas institution," with which Illustrated London News agreed.

66.400 The Circus Adventure (P) James Ambrose Brown. HAMPSTEAD 21/12/66 (m). Cast: Stage 5/1/66, 13; Theatricalia; WWT/15. Flower Girl Wendy Eyton; Talking Cat Tessa Loxton; Launcelot Peter Corey; Junkwoman Anita Beck; Ringmaster Joseph Martin; Pinky Michael Bland. Dir Myra Benson; Dec Ted Parker; St dir John Sloane. Review: Stage 5/1/67, 13. Comment:

Unicorn Theatre. The revival had a more solemn tone than the original production (Stage).

A fable for our time with just enough wit and innocent fantasy for sensitive adults and just enough horror and gore for children" (Guardian). "There is little magic in the production" but it did provide children with "a good thrill and a nasty fright" (Times). "The piece does want settings to go with its branching, indulgent imagination, and with Thurber's sense of language" (Illustrated London News).

66.403 Robinson Crusoe (Panto) Harry Bright and Stanley Wills-Croft. HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 23/12/66. 1st perfd Empire, Liverpool, 22/12/60? Comment: The production really relied on individual "turns" rather than a retelling of the tale (Times).

66.404 Babes in the Wood (Panto) Bill Robertson and Robert E. Probst (mus). WIMBLEDON 24/12/66.* Cast: Stage 5/1/67, 14; WWT/15. King Richard Roger Rees; Sheriff of Nottingham John Hart Dyke; The Robbers Brian Freeman, Al Paige; Robin Hood John Gower; Little John Kenneth de Bohun; Friar Tuck Douglas Gamble; Simon Roy Castle; Maid Marian Lulu; John Paul Large; Jennifer Elaine Paige; Nurse Martha Arthur Askey; The Fairy Rosemary Houlston; Malcolm Dockeray, Lewis Rich, James Vallon; The King Dancers. Pres Audrey Lupton, Arthur Lane; Dir Bill Robertson; Ch Rita King; Mus dir Robert Probst; Sm Graeme Cruickshank. Reviews: Daily Mirror 24/12/66, 25; Stage 5/1/67, 14; Times 28/12/66, 13. Comment: "The story line itself is frequently lost sight of," instead the focus was on Arthur Askey, Roy Castle, and Lulu (Times).

66.405 Puss in Boots (Panto) Alan Miles. RICHMOND 24/12/66.* Cast: Stage 5/1/67, 14. Queen Penelope Duggie Chapman; Puss Lucy Fenwick; Colin Carole Mudie; Princess Moya Donnelly; Ron Welling, Gillian Shephard, Paul Becque, Roy Williams, Alan Haywood, Alec Bregonzi, Nick Nissen, Salvin Stewart, Hazel Colman, Babette Palmer Dancers. Dir Frederic Piffard, Tony Clayton; Ch Babette Palmer; Dgn John C. Piper, Dorning Hibbert; Mus dir Joseph Alexander; Sm Ken Ward. Review: Stage 5/1/67, 14. Comment: "In this day and age it is indeed remarkable that the pantomime institution can survive at all—in the dubious circumstances of the survival it is even more astonishing that something as nearly traditional as the Richmond show can have been staged" (Stage).

66.406 Toad of Toad Hall (P) A. A. Milne (adpt of Kenneth Grahame, The Wind in the Willows, 1908) and Harold Fraser-Simson (mus). Plot: French, French/2. Reviews: Daily Mirror 24/12/66, 25; Stage 5/1/67, 13; Times 28/12/66, 13. Comment: David Coville's production was "deft, vigorous, and generally well cast" (Times). "So very much the mixture as before as almost to defy comment. Very nearly as enchanting as the original book and at a few moments perhaps a shade more so it holds the attention of the children as it always has and this year provides additional fun for the adults by its ingenious jail-break scheme" (Stage).

66.407 Babes in the Wood (Panto) Anon. REGAL c. 26/12/66. Reviews: Stage 5/1/67, 11; Times 23/12/66, 4 [sic]. Comment: Times welcomed the "lack of sentimental fuss" in the production. "It seems a suitable entertainment for the under-fives, who appear to enjoy it" (Stage).

66.410 My Poll and My Partner Joe (P,3a) John Thomas Haines. QUESTORS 29/12/66. 1st perfd Surrey 31/8/1835. Cast: QTA. Reviews: Middlesex County Times 6/1/67, 7; Stage 5/1/67, 10. Comment: "The company showed an excellent team sense and all members had suitable lunatic panache. The look of the show was good too, costumes looking like old nautical prints, and sets beautifully simple and toy theatrish" (Stage).

Comment: London Traverse Theatre Company. The plot involved a simpleton returning to his home town and becoming an overlord. Guardian was unimpressed by the lyrics and music. Quoting a programme note, Tribune explained the arbitrary content was “a conscious attempt to infuse the play with the spirit of the vanished Yiddish Theatre.” “The possibilities of this fable are ruined in the telling” (Times). Variety said the piece’s earnestness did not result in an “imaginative and stimulating” work.

67.2 A Word, Allow Me (Revue) Raymond Cross. PORTCULLIS 5/1/67.* Review: Stage 12/1/66, 15. Comment: Raymond Cross performed this one-man revue, and possessed a “limited a talent ... He does not become another personality as he plays” (Stage).

Comment: “Could a strong willed, however misguided, man convince others he was the new god? Intriguing intellectual arguments are tossed around and they certainly hold the interest. There is no scenery to distract. Alec McCowen, Maureen Pryor and William Marlowe star in this theatrical think-piece” (Daily Mirror). “A natural for crix and aficionadors,” but with a poor commercial outlook (Variety). “A considerable and thought-provoking work” (Christian Science Monitor). Observer opined the production had lost “a little of its force [at the Hampstead] ... in the larger, plushier auditorium” of the Duchess. “One of the richest and most stage-worthy British plays of the past 12 months” (Times).

Comment: English Stage Company. Observer praised Peter Gill's elegant, unfussy direction, but noted that "the playing of the supporting roles ranges from uninteresting to inadequate," a recurring feature of recent productions at the Court. Spectator placed the play as among "the most truthful, uncompromising and painfully moral plays" known in the English theatre, a feature of Restoration drama not recognized generally. "Peter Gill's production suggests an attitude of near-contempt for the routine material which could be much more inventive and funny" (Times).

67.6 Ask Me Tomorrow (P) Stan Barstow and Alfred Bradley (drm of Barstow's novel, 1962). INTIMATE 16/1/67. 1st perfd Playhouse, Sheffield, 17/2/64. Comment: The play was about the problems, fears and hopes of a young struggling writer. On opening night the theatre was nearly empty (Bowden, 119).

67.7 Brief Lives (P for one player, 2a) Patrick Garland (based on John Aubrey's works). HAMPSTEAD 16/1/67.* Cast: Stage 19/1/67, 14; Variety 25/1/67, 66; WWT/15. John Aubrey Roy Dotrice; Singer Terry Gould. Dir Patrick Garland; Dgn Julia Trevelyan; Cost dgn Dilys Elstone; St dir Robert Gabriel. Comment: The production was an expanded version of "Famous Gossips, 1: John Aubrey—The Antiquary 1626–1697" on BBC-1 TV 22/8/65. The production showed that "the dramatised monologue is still one of the living theatre's strongest suits" (Guardian). "Less a recital than a one-character play" (Observer). Times said Garland and Dotrice were "the right interpreters" for Aubrey. Illustrated London News opined it was the performance of Dotrice's career. The first New York production (Golden 8/12/67) ran for 16 performances.

67.8 The Experiment (C, 2a) David Halliwell and David Calderisi. Comment: Quipu. "A ramshackle, improvisatory, rather undergraduate affair, jeeringly nihilistic and fond of old, chanted jokes" (Observer). "A dismal, dreadful failure ... Briefly, a company are rehearsing a play about the assassination of an American President ... Once, the actors went into the stalls and up into the circle to play out scenes among the audience. The stage was left empty. How I wish it had stayed that way" (Daily Mirror). "A satirical exposure of that sacred bull of contemporary theatre," which needs revision (Tribune). "Much too sprawling and diffuse to do much damage to its chosen targets" (Times). The authors "extend their mirth so long that in the end few are laughing with them. If it were clipped to 90 minutes, it could be very funny" (Illustrated London News).

67.9 Hollow in the Sky (P, 1a) Ahmed Osman [trans M. Ennaney]. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 16/1/67 (Ln). Cast: Stage 19/1/67, 14. Mother and Wife Annia Tree; Son and Husband David Jackson. Dir David Jackson; Sm Bryan King. Review: Stage 19/1/67, 14. Comment: Theatre-scope. "A curious little piece, with symbolism from Ancient Egypt and hints of Oedipal incest to hold together its several episodes in the life span of a mother and her son," and overall unsatisfactory (Stage).

Comment: “Altogether a pleasing, though insubstantial piece of work. It is in characterisation rather than in range of social reference that The Promise fails to fulfil its title” (Tribune). Guardian faulted Frank Hauser’s “slow moving” direction, but Times found it “smooth, well-oiled.” However, Variety praised the production generally and predicted success. Illustrated London News lauded Judi Dench’s performance. Ian McShane and Ian McKellen repeated their roles for the first New York production (Henry Miller 14/11/67) which ran for 23 performances.

Comment: “Based on a one-act play which Mr. Kops wrote some years ago, concerning a group of derelicts living on a bombed site in East London, destined for demolition (Stage 15/12/66, 13). “Haunting and deep” (New Statesman). Tribune praised Kops’s “sure sense of locale,” his characters, but not his “heavy-handed plot-making.” Times outlined the play’s history and development and did not approve this iteration.

67.14 Black Coffee (Mystery, 3a) Agatha Christie. INTIMATE 23/1/67. Plot: Fletcher, French/2, Kabatchnik/2, Wagoner, 121. Comment: Jimmy Perry played Poirot (Bowden, 117).

Comment: A charity preview was given on 7/2/67 in aid of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. “Without Inga Swenson—recreating the role she played on Broadway—it would have been a decidedly chilly evening” (Daily Mirror). Tribune called it a dowdy, dated musical. Guardian did not think the music enhanced the original play and overall the piece was “rather like a poor’s man’s Annie Get Your Gun.” Variety noted the production was based on the New York version although the original choreography by Agnes de Mille had been cut “in favor of some sparse, dance-like interludes choreographed by Rae Landor.” The first New York production (Broadhurst 24/10/63) ran for 330 performances.

Comment: The play was written shortly before Howard’s death, and was completed by his daughter. On 20/3/67 the run was interrupted by a fire which damaged the stage (Stage 23/3/67, 15); the theatre reopened on 27/4/67. “A piece of traditional Christian apology, though using many of the ingredients of modern domestic drama” (Times). Illustrated London News faulted the play’s construction and wondered why the elegantly reconstructed Westminster was used to preach to the converted.

Reviews: Stage 16/2/67, 15; Times 14/2/67, 8. Comment: Times described the piece as a bewildering, “bizarre Celtic melodrama” that lacked “self-control and selectivity.” “Dedwydd Jones has piled drama upon horror and horror upon drama to an extent hitherto only achieved by the ancient Greeks and the modern Hammer films, both of which, in their very differing ways, did it better. In both cases, one has always been able to discover what the authors were talking about; but I, for one, was totally unable to keep up with this Mr. Jones” (Stage).

Review: Stage 16/2/67, 16. Comment: This piece, about an uncle, his wealth and his heirs, was “certainly not one of this experienced playwright’s more happy inspirations ... It proves beyond the Intimate Company to lend the affair much entertainment” (Stage).

Comment: The production recreated “the vigor, vitality, and sentiment” of the Broadway version, but with mainly “local talent ... shapes as an outstanding box-office contender” (Variety). Spectator praised Jerome Robbins’ choreography and Jerry Bock’s music, but the book and lyric “are a load of the usual antique drivell.” Tribune recorded the enthusiastic first-night reception of the piece and commended the honest treatment of the subject. Times (17/2) averred if the piece succeeded “it will be as a piece of dramatized folklore, put together with an artistry that does not conceal a soft centre.” The first New York production (Imperial 22/9/64) ran for 3,242 performances.

Comment: National Theatre. Tribune thought the performances of Laurence Olivier and Gerald McEwan “seemed to inhabit separate worlds” and the play suffered thereby. Guardian said Olivier gave a “terrific performance” which had “the gift of drawing our attention away from the defects in his colleagues—monotony of voice in Miss McEwan, mannered ambiguities from [Robert] Stephens.” Observer said that Glen Byam Shaw’s direction of the play as “macabre comedy” was vindicated by “Olivier’s performance as the captain, one of his greatest,” a sentiment echoed in Times, Variety. The production remained in repertory until 25/7/69.

67.48.2 A Quick Look at Ourselves. EMBASSY 21/2/67. Comment: I have been unable to identify this production

Comment: New Statesman said it was an “excellent comedy,” but noted the plot “seems pinched from Heartbreak House.” Observer also enjoyed this “neo-Shavian comedy” which included good performances from Jim Dale and James Villiers. “A bluestocking Shavian pastiche” (Times). Illustrated London News thought Brophy failed to “mobilize” her characters and found Dale’s performance “tiresome.” Daily Mirror said the piece was no more than a revue sketch and far too long.

67.51 Oh! (P) Sandro Key-Aberg JEANNETTA COCHRANE 22/2/67. 1st British perf. Cast: Stage 9/2/67, 13. Comment: London Traverse Theatre Company. “A set of desolating sketches which allege the total absurdity of human life” (New Statesman). Tribune called the piece pretentious and added “the poverty of the material is partially disguised” by the four actors.

67.52 Roots (P, 3a) Arnold Wesker. Comment: English Stage Company. Part of the Court’s “Schools scheme” where 100 seats were available for children at five shillings per seat, and with special schools matinées. Variety reported the decision to stage the play was the result of a poll at some schools. Christian Science Monitor defended the play stoutly as “one of the best plays ... of the modern movement in the English theater.” “Jane Howell’s production is a naturalistic collector’s piece (Times).

67.58 The Gay Princess (Mus) Tom Chatburn (bk, lyr, mus). LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 28/2/67.* Review: Stage 2/3/67, 19. Comment: "In addition to providing the book, lyrics and music, Mr. Chatburn was musical director and he probably played the hidden piano as well as appearing on stage in the character of a comical dreary when no music was required. Set in a pleasure steamer at the beginning of the century," this musical was "unremarkable" (Stage).

Comment: Tribune could not decide if the play was a "straightforward tale" or a "symbolic allegory," and did not find it rewarding. Variety also noted the play was a "mixture of realism and allegory" which Mortimer had not fused together successfully; however, with Patrick Wymark as the Judge the production "should command an enthusiastic audience." Christian Science Monitor said the play was about "the slow awakening of conscience," and the principal character could equally have been "stockbroker or a journalist" instead of a judge. Daily Mirror was intrigued by the play until the final fifteen minutes.

He has worked on the principle that once an audience consents to believe in what is going on, however unlikely, it will believe until the last” (Illustrated London News). “A single-minded contribution to the theatre of pleasure ... I am compelled to admit the existence of a good play that has practically nothing to express" (Times).

Comment: The revised 1958 version. Variety said the production dragged in places and thought its prospects were not good despite the name appeal of Joan Greenwood and Constance Cummings. Times thought the play would appeal only to older playgoers: "it is unlikely to win the author any new fans." Daily Mirror enjoyed the first act, but the other two "needed the kiss of life." However, Stage declared "the wit of the play is as fresh as ever it was; probably fresher, because time makes things better as well as kills them."

Comment: Theatre Workshop. The play was “refused a licence by the Lord Chamberlain on the grounds that it makes fun of the head of state of a friendly power” (Stage 23/3/67, 17). Thus the play was presented by the members of Theatre Royal Club. “The higgledy-piggledy blend of bitter nonsense and bitter parody only serves to weaken the parody and underline the nonsense” (Guardian). Tribune (14/4) recommended the production highly, noting Joan Littlewood had transformed the original script “from an amusing literary satire into a theatrical organism with a life of its own.” Observer (16/4) said Littlewood had substituted “her own brand of minstrel-show Cockney irreverence,” which made for “a thin evening.” The New York production ran for 386 performances.

Comment: National Theatre. Stoppard wrote a one-act draft version of the play in 1964 entitled Rosencrantz and Guildestern Meet King Lear. See also 64.313b. Observer singled out the performances of John Stride, Edward Petherbridge, and Graham Crowden. Guardian also commended those performances, but was left thinking “a fairly pithy and witty theatrical trick was being elongated merely to make an evening of it.” Irish Times said that a first impression of the play being “Waiting for Godot in Elsinore” was swiftly corrected by the second act that developed the piece into something more. Variety predicted success at the Old Vic and elsewhere. “A compound of Shakesperian criticism, Beckett-like cross-talk, and the mathematical nonsense comedy which befits a nonsensical situation involving two cyphers” (Times 12/4). Illustrated London News was unimpressed and averred Stoppard would write a significant play eventually. See also Lloyd Evans, 149–52. The production remained in repertory until 22/10/70. The first New York production (Alvin 16/10/67) ran for 420 performances.

Comment: A two-hander about a marriage on the rocks. Observer said the comedy was “an entertainment so ephemeral that I can already remember almost nothing about it.” Variety thought success was “chancy” because the play needed revision and the performances were “not stellar.” “A cheap and philistine entertainment that shows no understanding of how role-playing works” (Times). Illustrated London News saw merit only in Roy Dotrice’s “astonishing shifts of mood and personality.” The first New York production (Martinique 24/3/69) ran for one performance.

Comment: English Stage Company. "A sound and sensitive account" (Guardian). "An unforced translation by Edward Bond, and a good, clear-cut production" (Tribune). Christian Science Monitor described this memorable production as poetic, and the characters endowed with "a romantic melancholy." Times described Gaskill's production as "an intelligently sober piece of work," but said members of the cast were mismatched and so lacked the true ensemble the play required. Illustrated London News also noted two weak performances by Marianne Faithfull and Roddy Maude-Roxby. Daily Mirror found the production too slow, Faithfull performed better than expected while Glenda Jackson was "wasted" on Masha.

Comment: Tribune predicted the production would run for months because of "its all-star type-casting, and the sure touch of Frank Dunlop's" direction. After incisively and perceptively poking holes in Shaw's dramaturgy, Spectator condemned Dunlop's direction and the distinguished cast "whose acting, without exception, is of a feckless crudity rarely seen in London nowadays." Guardian observed the play "is virtually unactable except as a series of bravura set-pieces," and commended the cast on their performances. Times defended the play and most of the performances. Illustrated London News confessed that the production had completely changed its opinion of the play which it now viewed favorably. The first New York production (Booth 6/11/1916) ran for 112 performances.

196. Comment: "A story about the efforts of an estate agent to sell an ultra-modern house ... The amusing situations are punched across with the essential split second timing. Solicitors and MPs are stripped of their dignity and girls lose their particulars in a maze of double meanings and double takes. Brian Rix, Elspet Gray and Derek Farr lead this most welcome romp" (Daily Mirror). Guardian thought this was a better farce than the earlier Stand by Your Bedouin, although some of the dialogue could be funnier. Observer almost choked with laughter. "A bright and happy box-office future" (Variety). Recommended for all addicts of the genre (Times).

Comment: The programme also listed as characters The Killer and The Victim followed by question marks. Guardian wondered "how many audiences are going to fill this large theatre ... when almost any evening of television brings a routine domestic murder drama much like this." Variety said the piece was a combination of styles, "farce, tongue-in-cheek comedy and suspense thriller." Times noted there had been a change in the theatre's ownership along with "a sharp reduction in prices and the presentation of this hopelessly outdated, wordy and cliché-ridden comedy-thriller."

Comment: "Based on the version of the Passion Play performed at Thiersee in Austria" (Stage). The production tried "to be both mystical and theatrical: a tricky combination" (Observer). Lothar Bock's production overemphasized the theatrical elements (Times). "Somehow, this vast arena for public entertainment seemed an altogether fitting place in which to enact the world's greatest drama" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: Yaffe also wrote a version presented on American television in 1957. Guardian said Stephen Murray and Wilfrid Brambell did their best "to stave off the tedium" of the piece. "Stultifyingly boring" (Observer). The mechanics of the piece were all too obvious to Illustrated London News and Times. However, Variety concluded the play was "smoothly staged and acted, it rates a longish, profitable run." The first New York production (Longacre 2/2/60) ran for 39 performances.

Comment: Cameri Theatre (Israel) Company. World Theatre Season. Solomon and a cobbler exchange roles in order to prove the idea that kingly qualities are inherent. Guardian saw connections with English pantomime in the style of the piece which was presented by “boundlessly vivacious performers,” to whom the audience “responded quite well.” Christian Science Monitor noted the production was “free from the sentimentality” of many Jewish musicals, and praised the performance of Illy Gorlitsky. “An unassuming piece of musical folklore” (Times).

Review: Stage 11/5/67, 13. Comment: The play, possibly inspired by John Wilson’s Hamp, was concerned with who or what should be responsible “for an act of cowardice or belief,” an individual or an entire army (Stage).

67.141 The Bed-Sitting Room (C, 4a) Spike Milligan (text, mus, lyr) and John Antrobus and Harry Edgington (mus, lyr) and Alan Clare (mus, lyr). Comment: This revival was really just “another instalment of the Spike Milligan show” (Times). Illustrated London News expressed a degree of boredom with the revival. “The acting is endearingly awful, the scenery comically crude and the audience frequently and cheerfully insulted” (Daily Mirror).

67.142 She Stoops to Conquer: or, The Mistakes of a Night (C, 3a) Oliver Goldsmith. TOWER, CANONBURY, 5/5/67. Cast: TTC. Plot: Fletcher, French/2, Gassner, Hischak, Hochman, Law, Patterson, Salem, Shank, Shipley, Sobel.

67.143 The Beaux’ Stratagem (P, 2a) George Farquhar. QUESTORS 6/5/67. 1st perfd Haymarket 8/3/1707. Cast: QTA. Plot: Fletcher, Gassner, Hischak, Hochman, Law, Patterson, Salem, Shank, Shipley. Review: Middlesex County Times 12/5/67, 15. Comment: “The use of camera slides projected onto a large screen suspended above the Questors Theatre ... during intervals, added to the kaleidoscope of colour, and design in the theatre’s latest production” (Middlesex County Times).

Comment: “A posturing, inflammatory, deliberately dishonest work, destructive for the malicious excitement of destruction” (Observer). Having read the play beforehand, Tribune was unable to stay in the theatre to watch it. “After all the fuss made over it, Dutchman was a sad disappointment” (Christian Science Monitor). Guardian said this “excellent” production was accorded an ovation. Times called Charles Jarrott’s production “superbly atmospheric.”

Comment: Actor-manager John Hanson's West End debut after touring the provinces for years. "What a wonderful vanished world of tushery is brought back" (Guardian). Spectator did not object to the work but to the shoddiness of every aspect of the production. Variety noted the nostalgic appeal of the work. Times recorded the show received a "thunderous reception ... 'This is what we want,' cried an enthusiastic galleryite." "Is there a present-day demand for romantic operetta about flashing-eyed Sheiks and convent-bred girls? Obviously so, judging by the hysterical reception accorded to The Desert Song ... The audience, largely composed of middle-aged women in floral hats and summer dresses, joined in the choruses as though they had been singing them all their lives" (Daily Mirror). The first New York production (Casino 30/11/26) ran for 465 performances.

Comment: Performed under the collective title The Trojan Wars. Performed in modern dress. "One has to be dubious about much; but nobody can deny the courage of Bernard Miles, who directs, and his appreciation of the plays" (Illustrated London News). Guardian said the acting was variable but the sincerity could not be faulted. Variety noted the plays had been cut considerably, were performed on a bare stage, acted unevenly, but generally there was “dramatic impact.” Times wished the production was “less saturated in the atmosphere of the blood-tub,” which the language of Jack Lindsay’s translation encouraged. Comment: "It's a play about sex in the English middle classes—and there is nothing so predictably off-key as English actors and directors being sophisticated about sex" (Daily Mirror). "Its theme is the effect of a pop-sociologist's new-found role of tele-sage upon her marriage" (Tribune). Guardian did not think the piece was very funny and Yvonne Mitchell's talents were wasted. Irish Times agreed and added the play was "dreadfully dated." The piece aroused only a "tepid" response from Times. On the other hand, Observer (Ronald Bryden) complimented the author for presenting real people he actually knew.

The production managed the coarse side of the play well but not its elegance (Observer). Spectator declared the adaptation had "defanged" Vanbrugh's work and so was missing its "elegance, honesty and ... vicious scurrility"; it was also under-rehearsed. Daily Mirror said the production was consistently awful. "The players merely chat to each other, a free-and-easy method that reduces Vanbrugh to slippery-tongued twitter, and destroys the play. Treated like this, the dialogue sounds self-consciously careless" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Birmingham Repertory Company. The production played for every laugh it could generate (Guardian). Observer called it “an ingenious invention,” full of comic, often topical gimmicks that worked. Stage said the first act worked well; thereafter, until the final moments, the production loses its power to engage one’s attention, simply becoming a bore in the romantic love scenes in the forest between Orlando and Rosalind.” The production had “a medley of unlikeable costumes from various periods, a good deal of anxious business, and an entire failure to see how fatal it is not to let Shakespeare speak for himself” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Peggy Ashcroft's "Mrs Alving is a superbly controlled and paced performance," but insufficiently supported by Chloe Ashcroft and John Castle (Guardian). Christian Science Monitor wondered if there was any justification for a revival and found it in David Waller's Manders and, above all, Peggy Ashcroft's performance. "The production is so uninteresting that one wonders why ever one of Ibsen's most produced plays, and one of his least enduring, was in fact chosen" (Stage 22/6). Daily Mirror reported that "there was frequent laughter to relieve the tale of woe."

67.191 It Was Never So Merry, My Lord (P, 3a) David Shellan. QUESTORS 17/6/67.* Cast: QTA. Review: Middlesex County Times 23/6/67, 2. Comment: "The play deals with a derelict history teacher ... who feels that his subject must be lived, or at least acted, to be understood" (Middlesex County Times).

67.192 Death in Leicester (P, 3a) Roy Minton. QUESTORS 18/6/67.* Cast: QTA. Cast: Stage 22/6/67, 15. Reviews: Middlesex County Times 23/6/67, 2; Stage 22/6/67, 15. Comment: "The play, a highly verbose two-hander, depicts the dreary, unviewable lives of two decaying queers whose lives centre around a 'flutter' on the greyhounds. The writing is too clever, and contrived, by far" (Stage).

67.193 Boeing-Boeing (C, 2a) Beverley Cross (adpt of Marc Camoletti's play, 1960). RICHMOND 19/6/67. Bernard Simon Merrick; Robert Dudley Owen; Bertha Carmen Silvera. Plot: Bordman/4, 401, Fletcher, French/2, Loney. Comment: A two-week engagement.

67.194 Citizens Are Soldiers (P) Ruth Fairlight and Alan Sillitoe (from Lope de Vega, Fuenteovejuna [written 1611/18]). Brown. Plot: Griffiths, Hochman, Patterson. Reviews: New Statesman 23/6/67, 883; Stage 22/6/67, 17; Times 20/6/67, 6. Comment: 1520 Contemporary Theatre. "The husband and wife team do not seem to match as a play-writing pair. Sillitoe is primarily a realistic writer and his wife [Fairlight] a poet" (Stage).

"The theme is thin, the plot short-story weight," but well-acted by Preece and McAnally (Guardian). "The dialog is raw, amusing and sometimes pretentious, and the characters are fascinating" (Variety). Times declared Terson was "the most remarkable regional playwright to have appeared since Henry Livings."

67.197 Private Fires (P, 2a) Fred Watson. QUESTORS 20/6/67.* Cast: QTA. Reviews: Middlesex County Times 23/6/67, 2; Stage 29/6/67, 11. Comment: The play was not a black comedy but rather a "grey play made up from scraps left over from almost every dark hued play of the last quartet of years" (Stage).

67.198 A View to the Common (P) James Casey. COURT 20/6/67. 14 perf. Comment: English Stage Company. "Among the dreary furniture of a South London lodging house, the youth from the mental home, the other and more talkative young man, the woman with the coming-on disposition, the enigmatic homosexuals, and the dog, went through their inexplicable patter. The dog simply barked: and an alert performance he gave, greeted by the audience with ironic applause" (Illustrated London News). "A rambling piece about a youth driven mad by love of his room-mate" who eventually chooses someone else (Observer). The piece sounded as though it had been written by a computer (Spectator). "It is diabolically awful. A crude essay of sex and insanity. Banal and boring" (Daily Mirror).

Review: Stage 29/6/67, 11. Comment: "Joan Campbell ... knocked a rather trite little play into something pleasant and diverting. The action of the play concerns itself with two luxuriously impoverished aristocrats" (Stage).

Comment: The piece was saved by the strong cast (Observer). Variety said the script resembled "remorseless pantomime doggerel." Illustrated London News described it as "just a simple-hearted Cockney musical piece," but was still somewhat troubled by the obtrusive rhyming book. Stage reported the production had "a very warm reception. Throughout the evening it went with a swing." "A bright, brash musical played with an engaging freshness by a lively cast" which Daily Mirror predicted would be a success with "the young."

Comment: A revised version of The Best People (1909). "This production, rather ponderously directed by Joan Riley, is worth a visit, but one misses a real sparkle, the superb timing that means so much to Lonsdale's work, acting that really catches the mood and the wit" (Stage). Illustrated London News said the performances were "often trite." "It is probably the only play I've seen in which the furniture appeared more animated than the cast" which ruined one of Lonsdale's wittiest works (Daily Mirror).

Illustrated London News 15/7/67, 36; Observer 2/7/67, 19; Stage 6/7/67, 12; Times 28/6/67, 8. Comment: The play, which centered on “a boozed and feckless gentleman farmer’s equivocal feelings for his attractive married sister,” suffered from a “self-conscious and overwrought” text (Times). Illustrated London News called it an “an emotional nerve-storm with so responsive a player as Edward Fox to weather it.”

Reviews: Stage 6/7/67, 11; Times 28/6/67, 8. Comment: International Theatre Club. Also performed at the Round House on 29/6/67. Times reported that the piece was advertised as being about “race problems although “these criminals could be any colour”; ultimately, “the play emerges as a piece of indulgence revelling in imagination, very well played and leading nowhere at all.”

Comment: This “piece of social realism (strenuously done in terms of music hall farce)” was too long (Guardian). Guardian, Observer and Spectator noted an indebtedness to Ben Jonson, particularly The Alchemist. Tribune saw connections with Shelagh Delaney and Joe Orton. “I might have believed in it rather more if the second-hand car sold so often had looked less of a wreck” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Prospect Company. Observer commended the performances of Robert Hardy and Charles Kay. Spectator said the production captured the period strongly even with minimal props and shabby sets. Variety thought some of the cast played with “insufficient style,” while Illustrated London News commended the entire cast.

67.211 I Want to See Musov! (F, 2a) Valentin Katayev (adpt Marty Feldman of the French version, Je veux voir Mioussov! 1965, by Marc-Gilbert Sauvajon and Tamara

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. As the play progressed Guardian was inclined to agree with the New York critics who panned the piece. “A very funny comedy” which needed to be played much faster (Observer). Christian Science Monitor recorded the first-night audience gave the production a friendly but unenthusiastic reception. Tribune said Feiffer failed to relate the material to “real-life subjects.” The first New York production (Broadhurst 25/4/67) ran for 7 performances.

Reviews: Stage 6/7/67, 12; Times 4/7/67, 8. Comment: “The hero is very much an ageing Jimmy Porter—though a Porter of the 1930s and 40s rather than the last two decades. His grouses and streams of invective are all directed against young people” (Stage). The play “has a valid idea not so much dramatized as repetitively discussed” (Times).

Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian declared the play “lacks fully organised dramatic impact. It might hold attention more securely simply as a short case history in print”; but it was directed well by Robert Kidd and well acted. “A strange but compelling affair of soaring, poetic dialogue, and abrasive, wounding humour” (Daily Mirror). Christian Science Monitor declared this was the best first play the Company had staged since Look Back in Anger. Variety said the play deserved a wider audience even though it “leaves too much to the audience’s imagination.”

Comment: National Theatre. Observer declared that with this production the National Theatre company had finally come into its own. Guardian agreed and also called Budberg's translation "unobtrusive." However, Spectator described the production as "dully conventional" which only Joan Plowright rose above. The production was overshadowed by the Court's recent one (67.122) and "carefully plotted moves ... suddenly seemed not so much impressive as stagey" (Tribune). Christian Science Monitor also slated the cast. The production remained in repertory until 26/4/69.

The play was "too long and discussive ... and repetitive too, sometimes, at least in this translation, wordy and woolly. It clearly owes something to Beckett" (Stage). "A moving performance in the title-role by Timothy Bateson ... but a play of little real substance" (Tribune).

Comment: New Shakespeare Company. A generally successful production which worked well enough outdoors (Spectator).

Illustrated London News praised Forsyth's translation as "a text for the stage: speakable, lucid, one that, without refusing Rostand's verbal challenges, does not dwell on them too long."

Comment: A successful revival of one of Lonsdale's best light comedies (Guardian). Illustrated London News saw some merit in the play and described this production as "conventional." The production "must be classed with the worst revivals I have ever seen" (Stage). The first New York production (Fulton 9/11/25) ran for 385 performances.

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. "Sharp and witty performances by Dorothy Tutin and Janet Suzman" (Spectator). Variety forecast this more traditional production would be more successful than the "gimmicky" Vaudeville version (67.189) not least because of the prestige of the RSC, a view echoed by Guardian.

Comment: Variety noted the difficulty of forecasting the potential success of this “immensely funny” piece because of its unorthodox subject matter involving a spastic child. Despite the subject matter and some faults in writing, this is “a savagely penetrating comedy of human inadequacy” (Guardian). “This serious subject has blazing moments of comedy—it is angrily funny. It dares to shock with laughter. It succeeds because one can feel the underlying compassion” (Daily Mirror). “A masterly walk” between comedy and tragedy (Spectator). “At the night’s end it was clear that such an event as this could come only once in a playgoing life. Do not mistake me. It is not a great play, but it has a quality that can force tears from the most tedious cynic” (Illustrated London News). The first New York production (Brooks Atkinson 1/2/68) ran for 154 performances.

Comment: Performed by boys from Dulwich College and directed by Charles Hayward. The play, written by a fourteen-year old boy, “called for peace, toleration and understanding. It showed itself to be the work of a lively, interested but basically priggish mind” (Stage). “A preciously gifted twenty minute allegory” (Spectator).

Comment: English Stage Company. Staged for a limited run, the play concerned a postulant attempting to enter some sort of religious order. “A bewildering farrago” (Variety); Guardian concurred. The piece seemed constructed from “a make-your-own-expressionist-play kit” (Observer).

Comment: Based on fact, the plot involved two young lesbians who murdered the mother of one of them: “an exceptionally crass and wooden thriller” (Observer). “A sluggishly paced production somewhat spoils its qualities of suspense, but it does have two interesting characters” (Daily Mirror). “Dismally badly acted” (Spectator). “A grim affair, told slowly, but quickening in the key scene for the girls (acted fiercely by Felicity Kendal and Tessa Wyatt)” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: An amusing piece about “an ad agency [turning] its Cockney typist into a consumer computer” (Observer). Guardian thought it successful, as did Spectator which dubbed it “an astute and energetic farce.” “It is the kind of sharp, lively comedy well worth hearing, especially in James Roose-Evans’s production” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: "Just a quartet-comedy, designed for easy laughter, and not, alas, getting mine. I despaired long ago of anecdotes about husbands and wives who change partners" (Illustrated London News). Guardian lost interest in the plot: "the badinage never takes wing for long. The audacities sound trite." Variety said it was "a smart, amusing comedy ... a natural for the matinée trade." Daily Mirror enjoyed the "sophisticated and cutting wit." The first New York production (Booth 11/10/68) ran for 4 performances.

The production was limited to members only because the plays were unlicensed; similarly a planned transfer to the Vaudeville was abandoned (see Guardian 1/9/67, 16, Observer 3/9/67, 1). Guardian described the pieces as "only irreverent and not offensive." "Never portentous, often very funny and given unity by the immaculately polished playing" (Observer). While the material is familiar, the plays are notable for "the absence of smugness or self-pity; second, their stylistic sophistication" (Spectator). Comment: The play toured the provinces as I Want to See Musov! (67.211). Spectator recommended the farce and the performances of Peter Bayliss, Terry Scott, Ambrosine Phillpotts, and Derek Royle. Christian Science Monitor found this satire on Russian bureaucracy monotonous and lacking in the slick timing needed for true farce. "Not memorable or even, with few intermittent exceptions, enjoyable" (Variety).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. "One will not see the play again without remembering how it was accomplished here" (Guardian). Trevor Nunn "shows what can be done with lesser Shakespearian comedy" (Tribune). "A few deliberate anachronisms of period add to the fun; a Keystone Cops chase, Petruchio dressed as a Shakespearian cowboy from the Wild West for his wedding, are but two examples" (Stage). "A superb revival" (Illustrated London News).

67.243 Black Chiffon (D, 3a) "Lesley Storm." HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 7/8/67. 1st perfd Palace Court, Bournemouth, 18/4/49. Plot: Best/50, 316, Bordman/4, 291, Fletcher, Hirschak, Kabatchnik/2, 263.

Comment: This "idealised account of Lawrence's own whirlwind abduction of Frieda Weekley" was "commonplace and repetitive" (Tribune). "Workably, if naively constructed" with obsolete dialogue (Observer). Stage said the piece was just worth doing because of its autobiographical interest. Illustrated London News thought Robin Midgley did what he could with this clumsy and inferior play that also received good performances from Stephen Moore and Adrienne Corri.

67.246 The Anniversary (CD, 3a) Bill MacIlwraith. RICHMOND 14/8/67. Elaine Garreau, George Layton. Comment: A two-week engagement.

67.247 The Chiltern Hundreds (C, 3a) William Douglas Home. HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 14/8/67. 1st perfd Theatre Royal, Brighton, 18/8/47. Plot: Fletcher, Patterson.

67.248 Compendium (Revue) Derek Cunningham and John Mitchell (mus). LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 14/8/67 (Ln).* Cast: Stage 10/8/67, 39. Ronald House, John Mitchell, Doug Parker, Jean Michaelson, Derek Cunningham. Review: Stage 17/8/67, 20. Comment: A "snappy little show ... consisting of numerous short sketches with good pay-off lines" (Stage).

67.249 Maiden Over (Revue). LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 15/8/67.* Cast: Stage 10/8/67, 39. Review: Stage 17/8/67, 19. Comment: The revue depended too much on "a television and a sub-lavatorial level of humour" (Stage).

67.250 The School for Wives (C) Molière (adpt Miles Malleon of L'école des femmes, 1662). HAMPSTEAD 15/8/67. Arnolphe Jack Tweedle; Agnes Penny Jones. Dir Powell Jones; Set Mike Hanson. Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. “Excellent comic teamwork ... [made this] a classical comedy revival to cherish” (Guardian). Christopher Morley’s set “matches the fluency, authority and wit of the production” (Spectator).

67.252 According to the Evidence (C thriller) Felicity Douglas and Henry Cecil and Basil Dawson (fnd on Henry Cecil’s book, 1954). HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 21/8/67. 1st perfd Alexandra, Birmingham, 19/6/67. Cast: Theatricalia. Comment: The pre-West End production prior to opening at the Savoy in September (67.274)

Review: Stage 24/8/67, 15. Comment: New British Theatre Company. “Each of these plays deals with some controversial topic, The Deadline with attitudes to death, The Converter with the problem of colour, and The Insider with strength of personality. Each of the plays uses as its root some excellent and potentially, dramatic theme. Each of the themes fails to evolve completely” (Stage).

Comment: National Youth Theatre. The piece was commissioned by the National Youth Theatre and “much of its pleasure lies in the artfulness of its adaptation to the group’s particular limitations—huge company, slender budget, untrained actors, a predominantly school-age audience” (Observer). Tribune was unenthusiastic about the play and the production. See also Lloyd Evans, 152–53.

67.255 A Midsummer Night’s Dream (C) William Shakespeare. INTIMATE 26/8/67. Comment: Television star and comedian Charlie Chester played Bottom.

67.256 A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum (MC, 2a) Burt Shevelove (bk; based on Plautus’s plays) and Larry Gelbart (bk) and Stephen Sondheim (mus, lyr). RICHMOND 28/8/67. Pseudolus Alec Bregonzi. Plot: Bordman, Bordman/5, 627, Fletcher, Gänzl, Hischak, Kennedy, OTF, Wilmeth. Comment: A three-week engagement.

67.257 Philadelphia, Here I Come! (C, 3a) Brian Friel. HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 28/8/67. 1st perfd Gaiety, Dublin, 28/9/64. Plot: Best/65, 301, Hischak, Hochman, Patterson, Salem, Schrank, Vinson, Weintraub. Comment: The pre-West End production prior to opening at the Lyric in September (see 67.279). The first New York production (Helen Hayes 16/2/66) ran for 326 performances.

67.258 Black New World (Dance mus) Donald McKayle and Dorothea Freitag (mus) and Howard A. Roberts (mus). STRAND 29/8/67. 1st perfd Theresa L. Kaufmann Concert Hall, New York, 8/2/67?; 1st British perf Royal Court, Liverpool, 15/8/67. Cast: WWT/15. Miriam Burton, Jerry Grimes, William Louth, Sally Neal, Reviews: Daily Mirror 31/8/67, 14; Illustrated London News 9/9/67, 32; Observer 10/9/67, 20. Comment: A revue about the history of African Americans from slavery to the present. Observer thought the piece was “rather unimaginative ... excellently danced.” “I can’t remember a song-and-dance show having a more exhilarating ending than the sustained whole lot of rhythmic shaking which brought down the curtain” (Daily Mirror). Excerpts of this work were also presented at Howell Road School, Valley Stream, New York, 7/1/67.

67.259 A Victorian Nursery (P) Ronald Champion. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 29/8/67.* Review: Stage 31/8/67, 13. Comment: This “stale melodrama” was about how memories of a Victorian nursery affected a trio of people (Stage).

67.260 Dear Miss Hope (C) Dennis Woodford. HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 4/9/67. Cast: Stage 7/9/67, 15; WWT/15. Amy Walters Elisabeth Tyrrell; Mr. Barlow Dudley Owen; T.V. Kronk Tucker McGuire. Pres Frederic Piffard Productions; Dir Robert Peake; Dgn John C. Piper; Sm Geoffrey Salisbury. Review: Stage 7/9/67, 15. Comment: The comedy was written specifically to provide Irene Handl a non-Cockney character.

67.261 D'Oyly Carte Opera Company. WIMBLEDON 4/9/67. Comment: A two-week season of the Company’s repertoire.

67.262a Nathan and Tabileth (P, 1a) Barry Bermange (adpt of his story). HAMPSTEAD 4/9/67. Cast: WWT/15. Nathan Robert Bernal; Tabileth June Jago; Bernie James Culliford. Dir James Roose-Evans; Dec Harry Waistnage. Plot: Vinson, Walford. Reviews: Illustrated London News 16/9/67, 34; New Statesman 15/9/67, 332. Comment: The story was read on BBC Light Programme 6/11/59. “The ingeniously rendered stage version only serves to demonstrate the autonomy of radio” (New Statesman). James Roose-Evans’s production was “most movingly subdued” (Illustrated London News).

67.262b Oldenberg (P, 1a) Barry Bermange. HAMPSTEAD 4/9/67. 1st perfd BBC-2 TV 26/1/67; 1st stage perf

Church Hill Theatre, Edinburgh, 21/8/67. Cast: WWT/15. The Man Roger Booth; The Woman June Jago; Their Tenant James Culliford. Dir, Dec as for 67.262a. Plot: Vinson, Walford. Reviews: Illustrated London News 16/9/67, 34; New Statesman 15/9/67, 332. Comment: “Lacks emotional and intellectual validity” (New Statesman). Illustrated London News found the play “fierce,” and “a concentrated study.”

67.263 The Tempest (R) William Shakespeare. SCALA 5/9/67. Prospero Clive Emsley; Ariel Colin Marsh; Trinculo Duncan Woodcock. Dir Paul Hill; Dgn Brian Eatwell; Light John Brown; Ch Paul Mead. Comment: National Youth Theatre. Tribune could not understand why the company chose to stage The Tempest. New Statesman said the striking set promised a new interpretation of the play which never materialized. The company’s “robust style” did not suit the play (Times).

67.264 Antigone (P) Bertolt Brecht (anon trans of Die Antigone des Sophokles, 1948). UNITY c. 7/9/67. Helen Gold, Gill Butler. Plot: Hochman. Review: Tribune 15/9/67, 11. Comment: A faulty but honorable production with uneven acting (Tribune).

67.265 The Merchant of Venice (C, 2a) William Shakespeare. HAYMARKET 7/9/67. 100 perf. Comment:

Tribune complained “there is no sense of the director’s interpretative function” in the production. Guardian found much to criticize but liked the swiftness of the production. Observer thought Ralph Richardson’s Shylock made the production notable but he appeared out of context with everything else. Daily Mirror devoted its review to Richardson’s “commanding” performance. Times criticized the theatre’s policy of presenting classics as solely entertainment plays.

67.266 Dreamboat (C) Dan Sutherland. HIPPODROME, GOLDERS GREEN, 11/9/67. 1st perfd Ashcroft, Croydon, 4/9/67. Kenneth Connor, Nicola Pagett, Robin Hawdon, Terence Wilton, Cecil Cheng, Michael Gover, Pippa Benedict, Yasuko Nagazumi.

67.267 Fill the Stage with Happy Hours (P) Charles Wood. VAUDEVILLE 11/9/67. 32 perf. 1st perfd Playhouse, Nottingham, 9/11/66. Cast: Findlater; Stage 14/9/67, 17; WWT/15. Albert Harris Harry H. Plot: Vinson, Weintraub. Reviews: Daily Mirror 12/9/67, 14; Guardian 12/9/67, 5; New Statesman 15/9/67, 332; Observer 17/9/67, 20; Stage 14/9/67, 17; Times 12/9/67, 6; Tribune 29/9/67, 11. Comment: English Stage Company. “It portrays a tired, old, acting family, running a second-rate repertory theatre in the Provinces. Well, it’s authentic, for it is very much a second-rate play. Even talented and experienced players like Sheila Hancock, Harry H. Corbett and Hylda Baker couldn’t save it and they tried hard enough” (Daily Mirror). “As an attempt to analyse the neurotic compulsions on which the [theatrical] profession thrives it is a failure” (Tribune). Observer had praise for Wood’s dialogue but felt the characters were too grotesque to sustain the piece. Times said the piece could have been a first-rate satire on the theatrical profession, but wasn’t.

67.268a Futz (P) Rochelle Owens. MERCURY 11/9/67. 1st perfd Tyrone Guthrie Workshop, Minneapolis, Minnesota, 10/10/65; 1st British perf Barrie Halls, Edinburgh, 21/8/67. Plot: Bordman/4, 426, Bronner, Bryer, Vinson, Wilmeth. Reviews: Guardian 13/9/67, 7; Observer 17/9/67, 20; Spectator 15/9/67, 307; Stage 14/9/67, 17; Times 12/9/67, 6. Comment: La MaMa Troupe. Observer found the acting inaudible and crude. Times said this piece concerning bestiality was in fact “a highly moral piece.” “Violence and sex are the motivating forces and the cast display an athletic enthusiasm which disguises a certain lack of technical skill” (Stage). The first New York production was at LaMaMa 1/3/67. Also in the company’s repertoire was Sam Shepard’s one-act play Chicago, which Observer saw along with Futz and praised Kevin O’Connor’s performance. Chicago was 1st perfd St. Marks Church-in-the-Bowery, New York, 16/4/65.

67.268b Melodrama Play (P, 1a) Sam Shepard. MERCURY 11/9/67. 1st perfd Martinque, New York, 12/4/66; 1st British perf. Plot: MacNicholas, Walford. Reviews: Spectator 15/9/67, 307; Stage 14/9/67, 17; Times 12/9/67, 6. Comment: La MaMa Troupe. “A fantasy again about violence, in which the improvisatory patches—if, indeed, that is what they are—emerge simply as under-rehearsed dialogue” (Stage). More “a series of exercises in acting contact ... than a coherent work” (Times).

67.269 Candida (Mystery [3a]) Bernard Shaw. INTIMATE 12/9/67.  Plot: Demastes/1, Fletcher, French/2, Hischak, Hochman, Law, Mander/3, Matlaw, Patterson, Purdom, Salem, Shank, Shipley.

Comment: Guardian thought the secret service context served only to detract from a standard thriller. Observer agreed but deemed the piece "of above-average literacy, smoothly produced and performed." "In this neatly paced comedy-thriller, a delightfully funny performance by Naunton Wayne is well balanced by a stiletto sharp display from Douglas Wilmer as a secret agent" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: Variety praised Hilton

Edwards' superb direction and "some inspired moments" by the cast. Spectator castigated the play with its portrayal of the Irish and "their bland garrulous and immoderately indulged self-satisfaction," nor did the device of the dual hero do anything "to mitigate the basic boredom of the work." Tribune also thought the device was less than successful, but enjoyed the depiction of Irish rural folk. "The device (one character, two actors) is useful, though it prolongs the play unduly; and the private and public heroes are sharply distinguished by Donal Donnelly and Patrick Bedford" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Theatre Workshop. Spectator compared in detail the stage version with that in Private Eye and concluded the production was one of Joan Littlewood's best and deserved a long run. Guardian provided a parodic review (as though written by Mrs. Wilson) which indicated the production was highly successful. Christian Science Monitor discussed the portrayal of living public figures on the London stage and the censorship, and noted that the satire was "all done with good feeling." However, Tribune thought the production was "patchy," and the "personal jibes are more often slanderous than humourous." There were 255 performances at the Criterion.

Dunlop had failed to draw "a line between the pop and the vulgar" (Times). "The production certainly gets rid of the things which are listed in a programme note as having obscured a true vision of the play for many years—elaborate decoration, imitations of a fairy world, a magic touch, and so on; but I fail to see the reappearance of the real genius of the play" (Stage).

Comment: The plot involved two people stranded in a deserted house during a blizzard and experiencing ghosts. Guardian mentioned the similarities of plot found in Outward Bound and Time and the Conways and to much better effect. Times added Agatha Christie and Henry James to the list. “Dowdy and secondhand ... tedious and irritating,” but it played to an “apparently delighted house” (Observer). Illustrated London News objected to the dialogue which “is obstinately trivial, and in the first half the facetiousness of the man acted by Donald Houston almost had me tearing up my stall by the roots.”

Comment: Stage acknowledged that, politically, this was an important play about conscience; however, “on any other terms it is an old-fashioned, plodding exposition, with stale characters and a crude technical device in the reality-fantasy arrangement. Much of the dialogue is flat and without significance, a string of clichés emphasising this.” Times agreed, but still thought it was “a remarkable piece” to come out of Bulgaria.

Comment: National Theatre. Performed by an all-male cast. Observer wondered and discussed what the point was of using an all-male cast. Christian Science Monitor, however, welcomed the conception despite earlier preconceived objections because the result was to reveal the purity of the love speeches in the play. Spectator praised the cast but discussed the limitations of the approach. “The production works only spasmodically, and contains a number of pointless eccentricities” (Times). The production had Daily Mirror “squirming in my seat. I didn’t like it. Not one bit ... this production is a sterile, colourless, affair with the Forest composed of long glass tubes.” Illustrated London News preferred its Shakespeare straight. The production remained in repertory until 16/7/69.

A “moving and versatile production” (Times).

Comment: A performance of “protean virtuosity” from Alec Guinness in the (mostly) transvestite role of Mrs. Artminster (Guardian). “An ideal vehicle” for Guinness with some sinister plot developments; an auspicious debut” for Gray (Variety). Spectator noted the plot’s affinities with Peter Pan. Spectator was disappointed that Gray had explored his subject in “trite, crude and evasive terms.” Tribune compared the play with Orton’s work but said it lacked Orton’s “wit and technical mastery,” a view shared by Observer. The first New York production (Helen Hayes 27/1/72) ran for 4 performances.

Comment: Variety called Juliet Prowse’s performance “ebullient,” and predicted a long run “if the magic and showmanship” of opening night were retained. Guardian drew attention to the very good dancing while noting some scenes could be usefully shortened. Observer (15/10) said the show was “good, fast and loud,” and commended two “show-stopping numbers” which were nevertheless “unmemorable.” A very good musical, “full of oblique humour and bursting with good-natured energy” (Times). The first New York production (Palace 29/1/66) ran for 608 performances.

Comment: La MaMa Experimental Theater Company of New York. La Mama’s “model is jazz. Theirs is a jazz theatre” (Observer). Spectator said this “self-indulgent” company was “good at creating stage pictures” but “lamentable in characterization.” The review noted that halfway through the first part it took an improvisational break to “chat about Vietnam.” Times was favorably disposed towards the production but added that, for all the surface experimentation, the play was really “an old-fashioned costume drama.” Variety opined the unconventional company would attract only an “in-crowd” or “offbeat stage aficionados.” The first New York production (Stage 73 25/3/68) ran for 295 performances.

Comment: English Stage Company. "Written in 1933, Marya was banned in 1934 while still in rehearsal and has never been performed in the Soviet Union" (Stage 28/9/67, 18). Guardian thought this series of cameos about aspects of the Russian revolution was shapeless and dull. However, Observer held a contrary view, dubbing each sketch "brilliant," and wishing for more. Variety recorded a mixed reaction: the play's structure was untidy and alternated between drama and melodrama; however, the acting compensated for the roughness of the work. "Its honesty granted, it is a botched play in the theatre, rather the basic material for a long novel in which we could get to know and understand fully these people in their anarchic world" (Illustrated London News). "Splendid production of Babel's masterpiece" (Times).

Comment: Observer lauded Irene Worth's performance. For a devastating, negative analysis of the play, see Spectator which also snidely congratulated the management for recognizing the commercial value of this "reassuring yet vapid and unctuous" work. Tribune acknowledged Shaw was at his worst and best in the play which in this production lost its vigor in the final act. "The difficult timing of the last act is closely judged; throughout, Mr Clements, as director and as actor, appreciates the Shavian rhythms. His own performance is magnificently sustained" (Illustrated London News). Times was generally appreciative.

Comment: Refused a licence by the Lord Chamberlain, this was technically a private/club performance. Variety warned that this anti-war play was definitely not for the "carriage trade" but for aficionados only. Spectator was disappointed by Wood's "bombastic, sentimental and disingenuous" approach to his subject. Tribune admired the play's integrity but thought the play was boring in places and at nearly three hours in performance needed shortening. Times declared it was "Wood's most successful play to date."

Comment: A political play, set in the future, about an incompetent prime minister dealing with a crisis. "Racial issues; the struggle for political power. Powerful ingredients for a gripping play. Unfortunately it doesn't grip nearly as hard as it should. Too many of the Cabinet characters are wooden" (Daily Mirror). Guardian said the play was "maladroït" and "tedious." "Wildly implausible" (Spectator). More favorable was Variety's description of the play as "enjoyable, literate," and worthy of a run with Alastair Sim, John Gregson, and Michael Denison in the cast. Although the play had faults, Times said it was "reasonably intelligent and theatrically workable."

Comment: A "shoddy and pitifully unimaginative tale of kinks and wizards in the Cornish wild" (Spectator). "A cloud cuckoo-land display of nonsensical dialogue uttered by eccentric characters in search of a non-existent plot" (Daily Mirror). "All we see and hear is a noisy muddle, as vulgar and violent in speech as in action, full of rancid imagery, with a pleasure in smells and sickness and blood" (Illustrated London News). Times said the piece was a failed attempt to satirize the Theatre of Cruelty. "The play should not be missed" (Stage).

Comment: National Theatre. Guardian criticized Tyrone Guthrie's direction, Robert Stephens' "misconceived" Tartuffe, and John Gielgud's Orgon which failed to match Guthrie's conception of the character. The play "gives the impression of having been translated from the French by odd ode man Cyril Fletcher" (Daily Mirror). Spectator was even more severe in its criticisms. Observer praised most of the production but not Stephens' Tartuffe. Times focused on "Gielgud's curiously negative performance." Comment: The piece had won the 1963 Burlington National Drama Award (USA). "The plot pits an atheist longshoreman against his pious wife, and makes an un-witty, distasteful mockery of their respective reverences for modern science and religious symbolism" (Irish Times). A bad play notable only for Libby Morris' expressive performance as the wife (Guardian). "A tinny, sentimental American comedy [played] as if it were Hellzapoppin" (Times).

Comment: "A floppy, sprawling, chumbling piece" which accurately judges the audience's reactions (Spectator). Guardian noted Ustinov's "wit and originality," which the play itself did not ultimately live up to; it was really sustained by Robert Morley, "gorgeously funny in his own right." Variety repeated that view. Times compared the play unfavorably to the work of Hugh and Margaret Williams, concluding the play fell apart. Comment: Theatre Workshop. Daily Mirror reported the "series of rather flimsy sketches" ran for two hours forty-five minutes. Guardian said the production was somewhat sketchy although Avis Bunnage gave a good performance in the lead. Observer declared "Avis Bunnage's Marie is a great creation," although the remainder of the show was uneven and conventional. However, Tribune opined the staging was "deceptively casual ... apt and impressive, moving easily from episode to episode." Times said it was an uneven production and the extensive doubling by the cast muddled the plot.

Review: Stage 30/11/67, 14. Comment: Theatrescope. The play "explores the plight of a bi-sexual brother and sister who discover love and act out their dreams in children's games. The theme itself is really too broad for a one-acter" (Stage).

Comment: Variety said the cast was accomplished and emphasized Wilde's epigrams with relish. "Clumsily directed and abominably played, plumbs depths rarely, if ever, met with in the West End these days" (Spectator). "Malcolm Farquhar's production leadenly emphasizes most of the play's faults" (Times). Illustrated London News hoped this was "the last revival of a lesser Wilde play for a very long time."

Comment: OTF provides an account of the production's various difficulties. Variety reported the production cost over $350,000, thought it was disappointing, might well appeal to "the less demanding coach and party trade, and had the advantage of "Harry Secombe's name and following." "Less a theatrical than a stock exchange event ... one is struck by the huge disparity between artistic and financial investment" (Times). "What I must call a most unhappy extravaganza. It is unhappy because it vulgarizes the romance; because it wastes the great stage of Drury Lane; because, nearly from first to last, it is show business in the emptiest sense, that and nothing more. Maybe the choice of Sean Kenny as set designer saves the occasion from entire vapidness, but I have rarely been more discouraged by a production that has cost so much" (Illustrated London News 16/12).

Comment: "A stylish revival ... with a potent name cast" (Variety). Guardian praised the cast and added the play "is frankly 'appealing' in a manner unfashionable to the advanced tastes of today's theatre." "Smith has always known how to report the small things: again and again we recognize the truth of some trivial observation. It does not really matter that the picture, as a whole, is dimming. What does matter, I think, is the sense of peace and civilized humanity" (Illustrated London News). In an extensive analysis Spectator indicated how the play "indulges ... our weak desire for dishonest comforts." Times opined that the play was too much like many other "well-made plays set among the upper middle classes."

Comment: English Stage Company. The plot involved a three-headed dragon that terrorizes a town and is killed by a youth. Guardian reported the theatre was only half-full on opening night. "Played out in a circus atmosphere" (Christian Science Monitor). Tribune noted the piece could be enjoyed by children on the fairy tale level and by adults who could detect the political allegory.

If I had been feeling unduly cynical I may have found the sequence of events and characters too close to familiar moulds—nuns, priests, lavish quotes from ‘bold Robert Emmet’ ... It is corn, but corn of a high order.” (Stage). The first New York production (Longacre 1/12/60) ran for 20 performances.

Comment: “An almost contentless display of theatrical juggling with reality and unreality” (Observer). Christian Science Monitor reported the piece played to crowded but somewhat bewildered audiences. “This play, difficult and intensely personal, seems now and then to be about the nature of reality; its interval can be occupied with some profit by considering how Williams (Emlyn) and Williams (Hugh and Margaret) might have treated the same subject” (Illustrated London News). Times noted the play’s faults but thought it succeeded “quite brilliantly in sustaining the idea that nothing whatever is to be relied upon”; “absolutely excellent” acting. Revised later as Out Cry and performed thus in New York (Lyceum 1/3/73) where it ran for 12 performances.

Comment: Stage said it was "faithful enough to the line of the original, as well as to the spirit," but exuded Victorian England rather than American. "Perhaps it's fairer to think of this as a play for children only" (Guardian). For Observer Walker's adaptation was somewhat unsatisfactory "partly because it smothers all sense of danger in antimacassared cosiness" and partly because of the mixture of accents used.

Comment: Times said the production needed the return of the indisposed Arthur Askey to salvage the comically "weakest Palladium pantomime for some years." "All the people round me had a thoroughly good time and it was unfriendly to sit there and wonder why. Obviously the cast was gay; the sets were vast; the house laughed. Yet it appeared to me to be laughter bred of mechanical recognition" (Illustrated London News). Observer remarked on the production's "lollipop colours, booming amplification and abysmal television jokes." Daily Mirror reported the show cost £85,000 to stage.

Comment: Guardian provided several examples of how Byron's original had been augmented by witty borrowings from various plays and operas. Spectator was equally enthusiastic about the production. "A splendid example" of the burlesque pantomime genre which combines "the traditional pantomime story, highlights from well-known operas and the outline plot of Macbeth (Times).

Comment: "Nicely theatrical" but it might have made more of the soldier's adventures (Guardian). Tribune noted some topical in-jokes had been added to the script since its first performance. Times praised Arden for creating his own legend and the cast for its performance. "It comes out in performance as both self-conscious and self-indulgent. It is not the fault of the company, which gets through it with the quickest resource" (Illustrated London News).

Review: Middlesex County Times 5/1/68, 8; Stage 4/1/68, 9. Comment: "The work was directed by [Alan] Chambers with imagination, knowledge of period and mechanical invention" (Stage). "The play, which must have been modified from the original, was a cross between music hall, pantomime, and a late-night television programme called Twice a Fortnight. Everything was deliberately overacted, the handsome hero was cheered and the startlingly ugly villain was hissed. There were some excruciating puns and some slightly blue jokes" (Middlesex County Times).

Comment: Observer was baffled why this play was revived. Christian Science Monitor defended the play although conceded it was “insufficiently witty.” “The little play is an agreeable, gentle murmur, but not maybe one for playgoers bred in the theatre to a deafening din” (Illustrated London News). Times indicated there was little point to the play and the dialogue was clichéd.

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Paul Scofield fell ill after opening night and was replaced by his understudy, Ian Hogg. Observer deemed the production “a noble half-failure,” while Guardian listed several specific defects. Like other reviewers, Tribune (12/1) noted Scofield’s idiosyncratic diction and punctuation of the verse. Times thought the interpretation was acceptable but the execution was not. Illustrated London News declared Scofield’s performance was one it would always remember whenever the play was revived.

Comment: "A splendid melodrama of doubtful American antecedents which has a pure heroine, a dastardly villain, an upright young man wrongfully accused of murder and some suitably neurotic members of the upper classes" (Stage). A "tongue-in-cheek" production exploiting "every melodramatic convention in the book" (Tribune).

Comment: National Theatre. Guardian reported the production lasted over three hours which resulted in the plot being lost. Christian Science Monitor commended the visual splendor of Tanya Moiseiwitsch's designs and faulted Tyrone Guthrie's too literal interpretation of the characters being animals. "A spectacle more curious than pleasing" (Spectator). Times noted the text was virtually uncut; thus the production lacked the complete energy this required. The production remained in repertory until 7/6/68.

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. “One of the very finest things the RSC has done” with an outstanding Bertam from Ian Richardson and good support from Brewster Mason’s Lafeu” (Spectator). Daily Mirror was equally laudatory. Tribune praised John Barton’s direction for the “full realisation of Shakespeare’s verbal intentions.” “A spirit of avuncular kindness prevails ... Whatever darker sides the play may have are hardly visible here” (Times).

The play was about a Catholic priest with a stigmata and, said Times, needed rewriting. "Raven seems to be alternating between imitations of Shaw, in which he gets nowhere near the target, and Graham Greene, a very near miss" (Stage).

Comment: "A play of substance for any time" and not a mere historical curio; Richard Briers gave the "most considerable" performance of his career (Guardian). Observer slated the play as "peculiarly ill-made," but with a forceful message that still resonates. Similarly, Tribune praised the play for "an inner conviction and committed moral purpose, which .. keep it alive and kicking on a contemporary stage.” Variety deemed the production worthwhile, praising the “marquee cast, deft direction, and Briers’ outstanding performance.” The play’s failing, said Times, was “Galsworthy’s resolute dedication to giving us, relentlessly, nothing but the story.” The first New York production (Candler 3/4/16) ran for 104 performances; Bordman/3 notes that the play had been seen in Chicago “five years earlier.”

Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian defended the mixture of “gaudy Carnaby Street gear and period costumes.” “Under the meaningless costuming” there were good performances from John Steiner, John Normington, Vickery Turner, and “an outstanding Malvolio by Jack Shepherd” (Observer). The production plodded and lost its way (Tribune). “I am sure that young audiences—for whom it is primarily intended—will find it all engaging, and we can hope that one day they will hear the beauties of Twelfth Night as well” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: A charity preview was given on 31/1/68 in aid of the Moorfields Eye Hospital. There were no additional previews and press night was on 6/2/67. Guardian reported the production was “fairly well received” on press night but lamented that the play did not seem to have any importance. Variety complained the play “wanders uncomfortably from farce to comedy to melodrama and drama and back again.” Spectator (9/2) provided a lengthy defense of the play which “contrives to titillate and pamper ... [a] well-defined middle-class audience.” Tribune set out a brief but clear explanation of the plot, the theme, and the faults of the production. “Nimbly scampers over the rubble of its plot and of its characterization to get its laughs” (Times).

Comment: “A gently bouncing little revue” (Observer). “It had a very prosperous first night” with many Schulz devotees in the audience (Christian Science Monitor). Variety noted the comic strip was published in England in the Daily Sketch and so the piece had a “built-in audience.” “The evening passes pleasantly. It is all sentimentally good-natured” (Times). The New York production ran for 1,597 performances.

Comment: Guardian described the production as a “somewhat perfunctorily given ... semi-dramatised reading.” Tribune noted the Shaw estate had insisted on the preservation of Shaw’s original, non-theatrical works, hence the dramatised reading form for both works. Times commended Shaw for deciding not to turn the book into a play.

Comment: “Restraint and absorption are what we miss in a triple bill at the Arts: an odd partnership of Michel de Ghelderode, Chekhov, and Shaw. The Farce of Death Who Almost Died ... is a cumbrous business, mediaeval-comic-macabre; the Chekhov ... and the Shaw ... are amiable trivia. All are wrecked by acting that—with the exception of Matyelok Gibbs—seems to be bringing a garden-roller to an eggshell” (Illustrated London News). Farce, about “an aged philosopher is brought up against the reality of Death and imagines for a time that he has conquered it, is inventive and has some interesting discussion. Both production and acting however are crude and shallow” (Stage).

Comment: “A large, lavish, rowdy, sentimental but rather empty entertainment”; Judi Dench throws herself with “infectious glee” into the role of Sally Bowles (Guardian). “A thing of shreds and patches, despite its production expertise, and its glibness and superficiality must prove a disappointment” to readers of the original Isherwood stories; Judi Dench possessed “exuberance” but lacked the “pathos or the neuroticism” of Sally Bowles (Variety). “This isn’t a musical without flaws. There are some dull patches, but on the whole it has a lively, intelligent score and some energetic dancing. It certainly deserves to run” (Daily Mirror). “The piece is perfectly acceptable for what it is: a Broadway musical, far better than most” (Illustrated London News). Comment: English Stage Company. This was the first of three Lawrence plays staged at the Court in February and March: they “are excellent documentaries of family life struggling to flourish in the shadow of the pits” (Daily Mirror). A very good revival, well directed, with a mostly fine cast (Times). “An interesting effort; but it seriously lacks real dramatic feeling and tension. It is long-winded and ponderous, though Lawrence’s attempt to dramatise the life of a miner’s family sixty odd Comment: This American play apparently dates from 1945. “A script–New England family quarrel with intermittent supernatural overtones—that even a company led by Joan Miller cannot be expected to transform” (Illustrated London News). “Quite the worst play I’ve seen in the West End for several years and confirms the Vaudeville’s right to be recognised as a disaster area” (New Statesman). “A small but passionately sentimental ghost-play” (Observer). “An uninspired brew with stodgy dialog” (Variety).

Comment: English Stage Company. Variety praised this as the best of the Lawrence trilogy at the Court and noted the final ten minutes held the audience "enthralled." Guardian said the three productions were "definitive versions of these supremely reticent yet extraordinarily eloquent slices of strict naturalism." Similarly, Times praised the "stoic naturalist idiom" of both play and production.

Comment: National Theatre. Performed in modern dress. Because of the violent and erotic content of the production, a special matinée for school children drew criticism (see Variety 3/4/68, 75). “A Stoic play in an Epicurean production” summarized Tribune’s response to Peter Brook’s direction. Guardian said that despite errors there was much “to admire in this excitingly experimental, stern, unbroken two hours.” “John Gielgud is very impressive as Oedipus” (Christian Science Monitor). Times praised the “thrilling performances” of Colin Blakely and Irene Worth, but found Gielgud’s Oedipus “only marginally in contact with the show.” The production remained in repertory until 3/8/68.

Comment: Christian Science Monitor thought that “James’s beautiful, absurd, adverbial, convoluted language ... gives it a charm a cultivated audience can enjoy.” “A poor play, a period piece which should have been left to gather dust on its Edwardian shelf. The trouble with Henry James is that he invariably wrote six or seven words where one would have been adequate” (Daily Mirror). “Good performances” from Kenneth Farrington, Anna Barry, and George Coulouris (Guardian). Spectator praised Campbell Allen’s direction for bringing out “James’s masterful intelligence, his intricacy and comical self-mockery.” However, Times said the direction was “rather tentative” and the production was “inclined to get entangled in the serpentine dialogue.”

Comment: Guardian said this “overlong end-of-term college beano” needed to be severely pruned, but hoped it would succeed. “Vastly entertaining” (Christian Science Monitor). Tribune thought Chaucer’s work adapted well to the stage with its “updated verse idiom.” “The gay and bawdy, somewhat artless musical comedy lacks marquee appeal, but compensates with its exuberance and novelty” (Variety). While the production rambled it really brought the tales to life (Times). The first New York production (Eugene O’Neill 3/2/69) ran for 121 performances.

"Written for television. It smacks of the small screen" (Variety). Times noted the play's resemblance to other plays dealing with "the impractical dreamer and his long-suffering family," adding "it does not suggest the presence of a strong individual talent." The first New York production (St. Clements 17/12/74) ran for 25

Comment: English Stage Society. Produced without decor. The play, banned by the Lord Chamberlain because of its treatment of Queen Victoria involved in a lesbian relationship with Florence Nightingale, was given before a private audience on 31/3. It received "a special private rehearsal showing last Sunday afternoon [7/4], after an intended evening performance was banned, for critics and friends" (Stage 10/4/68, 13). See also Findlater, 92–93. Times pointed out that the lesbian element wasn't all that important, and regretted the Court's just "fight for theatrical free speech should be conducted on behalf of a piece as muddled and untalented as this."

Cast: Stage 25/4/68, 13; WWT/15. The Mother Margaret Boyd; Martha Pauline Delaney; Jan Rio Fanning; Maria Kate Binchy; Old Servant Paul Farrell. Dir Stephen Dartnell; Dgn John Vere Brown; Light Christopher Bazeley; Sm Anne Monk. Plot: Hochman, Patterson, Matlaw. Reviews: Birmingham Post 9/4/68, 11; Illustrated London News 20/4/68, 29; Stage 25/4/68, 13; Tribune 26/4/68, 11. Comment: Also known as The Misunderstanding. In this translation and production, the play was "a very dull, slow-moving explanation of a tragic enough series of events sparked off by the hero-victim's own stupidity" (Stage). "We can hardly blame the cast for being baffled sometimes by a translation that mingles the turgid with the baldly matter-of-fact" (Illustrated London News).

68.84 Relatively Speaking (C, 2a) Alan Ayckbourn. RICHMOND 8/4/68. Plot: Demastes/2, Fletcher, French/2, Law, Patterson, Vinson, Weintraub. Comment: A two-week engagement.

68.85 Super Santa (C, 1a) Ed B[erman]. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 8/4/68 (Ln).* Cast: Stage 10/4/68, 15. Super Santa Bill Bailey; OO Marie Adams. Dir Edward Berman; Sm Brian Guthrie. Reviews: Stage 10/4/68, 15; Times 9/4/68, 13. Comment: Theatrescope. About a department store Santa Claus and "his encounter with a ripe young Lolita sparks off a sexual fantasy ending with the couple mating in Santa's symbolic sack" (Stage).

68.86 Antigone (T) Sophocles. UNITY 14/4/68. 1 perf. Plot: Fletcher, French/2, Gassner, Hochman, Law, Patterson, Salem, Shipley. Comment: Greek Arts Theatre of London. Performed in modern Greek.

Comment: Balustrade Mime Group of Prague. World Theatre Season. "A pantomimed history of pantomime" commended by (Observer). Christian Science Monitor said the production was not as interesting as The Fools, seen the previous year and to be repeated later this season.

68.88 Up the Garden Path. INTIMATE 15/4/68. Comment: I have been unable to identify this piece definitively.

Comment: The adaptation “drained all the irony out of Chekhov’s” work (Observer). “The total gesture of a drama is missing” (Guardian). Variety praised the acting of Peter Wyngarde and Michael Bryant, as did other reviewers. Times compared the adaptation unfavorably with one on television “some years ago” [presumably on BBC TV 16/10/63], but said it was nevertheless “workmanlike.”

68.90a Home Free (P, 1a) Lanford Wilson. MERCURY 16/4/68. 1st perfd Caffè Cino, New York, 16/1/64; 1st British perf. Cast: Stage 25/4/68, 13; WWT/15. On the censorship of the play, see Guardian 11/4/68, 4, Variety 17/4/68, 61. Spectator said of both plays “the material is banal and insignificant enough, what makes them extraordinary is the elegance and force of the telling.” Observer noted the “intense intimacy” of the performances by Claris Erickson and Michael Warren Powell in Home Free.

Comment: Observer reported the huge ovation given to Alec McCowen’s performance in the lead which marked the “birth of a new star”; similarly Daily Mirror said “a performance which will be talked about for years.” Guardian fell a little short of such declarations about McCowen’s achievement, while Spectator could offer a parsimonious he “has some nice moments.” However, Times described his performance as “immaculately conceived and fastidiously executed.” The first New York production (Helen Hayes 8/1/69) ran for 359 performances in which Alec McCowen appeared.

Comment: Performed without an interval. Variety reported opening night ran 140 minutes and predicted a “durable success.” Guardian enjoyed Keith Michell’s performance but had doubts about the work itself. Times welcomed the show’s lack of “the usual trappings of the gold-plated Broadway musical.” “Brimming with fantasy and featuring an extremely good deathbed scene which had women in the audience dabbing their eyes, this muscular play with music has some obvious ingredients for box-office success” (Daily Mirror). The first New York production (ANTA Washington Square 22/11/65) ran for 2,328 performances.

Spectator 3/5/68, 605; Stage 2/5/68, 14; Times 26/4/68, 9; Tribune 10/5/68, 11. Comment: Drama Group of the Balustrade, Prague. World Theatre Season. Guardian noted the disparity between the vigorous declamations on stage and the polite simultaneous translations. "The twin barriers of language and politics blurred the significance" of the production (Tribune). Times thought the production revealed the play was more than just "an historical curiosity," although it still did not "bring out [Ubu's] full grotesque nastiness."

Comment: Théâtre de France Company. World Theatre Season. According to Spectator the company endeavored to overcome "the gap between Claudel's inflated language and his humdrum plot" but ultimately failed to do so. Christian Science Monitor entertained an opposing view and said in performance the play "becomes a great theatrical force," as here. Times discussed both Barrault's "sacred" attachment to Claudel which many French did not share, and the unevenness of the play itself.

Comment: National Theatre. Guardian offered a negative view of the play itself (“as dry and deflated as silent cinema documentary”) and thought most of the acting was un-Brechtian. Tribune presented a rebuttal: “This incredible richness of substance makes the bored belly-aching of the Brecht-phobes even harder to understand than usual.” Times was unsure of the play’s purpose and thought Frank Dunlop’s production lacked a “personal signature.” Stage described it as a “brilliant production”; “Dunlop’s direction is assured in its grasp of detail as well as essential things; it unfolds the drama grandly in a light which suggests a time and a land of long ago, yet is afire with life.” The production remained in repertory until 25/1/69.

Comment: English Stage Company. Observer described the piece as "a run-of-the-mill play, but shows a new theatrical craft and objectivity." "The first hour ... is a tour de force ... But then nothing much happens" (Guardian). Spectator determined this tedious and predictable play was "a parable on the relationship between the successful playwright and his critics." Osborne has written "a long, arduous and showy role for his actress-wife, Jill Bennett ... but the play itself is cold, arid and superficially pointless" (Variety). Times (24/5) predicted the play would rank only as a curiosity; however, Times (12/7) welcomed its presence given "the current state of West End drama."

Comment: "A feeble little parody of Cinderella. The tinkly little musical has a few good moments," but not enough to make it successful (Variety). Times favoured the piece for its "bright ideas, and unstrenuous charm," but conceded it was "a rough-edged production with no spectacular appeal." "Nobody has anything to say or to sing that ... one can remember five minutes afterwards. Perhaps it might help if the stage looked more inviting; visually it is a barebones production" (Illustrated London News). The first New York production ran for 110 performances.

Comment: Royal Dramatic Theatre Company, Sweden. World Theatre Season. "These are Ibsen players down to their finger tips" (Guardian). "Getrud Fridh's Hedda is one of those rare, ravishing creations in which the dryness of the character is somehow contained with a performance of radiant generosity" (Spectator). Times described the production as being "of exemplary logic" in which the audience is asked "to judge Hedda instead of being riveted by her personality." "But the Hedda she plays is the heroine of a Bergman film, not of a play, certainly not Ibsen's" (Observer).

Comment: Guardian thought much of the point of the original Odets play was lacking; the real objective was Sammy Davis, Jr.'s performance, singing and dancing "in gold lamé pants of stupendous tightness." "Its ovational reception augured well for its local impact" (Variety). Times noted the original play had been reworked successfully "in terms of modern American society ... The main loss is of Odets's original dialogue." Davis had appeared in the first New York production (Majestic 20/10/64) ran for 568 performances.

Comment: New Shakespeare Company. Times thought this was a curious choice for the Open Air because, apart from the last act, "it is basically an indoor urban farce that gains almost nothing from being staged outside." Illustrated London News was satisfied that "the company, under Richard Digby Day, acts with breadth and freedom."

Comment: Galsworthy's play about life in London after the war envisioned little change occurring. Galsworthy's reputation deserved "a better fate than the resurrection of a farcical trifle" such as this (Variety). Guardian noted the play was "quite perceptive as prophesy," its moral worthy, but ultimately "quite unimportant." "A well-meant footling fantasy" (Observer). A "smug vision of the trenches and the London poor in 1917" (Spectator). Times welcomed the revival but said what the play needed "in performance is a highly disciplined farcical attack," while this production "never ventures beyond the shallows of light comedy." "Performed as a sort of satirical strip cartoon, it shows yer actual working class and yer actual capitalist toff confronting each other in the marbled splendour of an aristocratic M.P.'s home in Park-lane. But the level of acting and production is so uneven as to confuse one about the play's comic or serious intentions" (Daily Mirror).

As part of the piece's attack on convention "English actors address French actors in English and are replied to in French" (Stage). The whole production was "an almost physical assault on one's ears and a not inconsiderable insult to one's mind" (Tribune). "Not a show for theatrical puritans. It does, however, have enormous brio and is directed by Jerome Savary with undeniable inventiveness" (Times). Comment: Arden and his wife Margaretta D'Arcy played the leads. "The script was prepared with Unity in mind, and the group of actors who form the basis of the company—the Cartoon Archetypical Slogan Theatre" (Stage 23/5/68, 1). "An evening of almost stupefying banality" (Stage 20/6). "Not really a play at all, but a form of political protest" (Tribune).

Reviews: Stage 20/6/68, 8; Times 17/6/68, 6. Comment: Repertory Players. The Repertory Players closed in 1968 "after presenting 320 new plays since 1921" (Stage 1/8/68, 1). A workmanlike, "if rather unexciting," piece about the past's hold on the present (Times).

Comment: There was a week of paid previews beginning 10/6, the first time this had been done in the West End (see Stage 30/5/68, 1). The plot of this curtain-raiser involved three young people desperately trying to sell an unfinished musical to a manager. "Almost as enthusiastically received as the evening's main item" (Observer). Variety thought the double bill was "slight but spasmodically amusing" and lacked general appeal. "Remarkable for the performance of David Baxter ... a brilliant clown, flopping about the stage in an agitated manner" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: “An hilarious fantasy, for the most part, of particular appeal to people in show business” (Daily Mirror). Guardian thought the idea of the play was clever, but the total effect was disappointing and “too often facetious.” Observer praised Stoppard for going “his own way” and sticking to comedy, for not viewing it as an “inferior genre,” and for proving he is “a new comic master.” Times said the theatre critics in the play were as theatrical as the other characters which destroyed any sense of the barrier of illusion being broken. The first New York production (Theatre Four 23/4/72) ran for 465 performances.

Comment: National Theatre. “Here are three short plays from three centuries; a rickety piece of programme-building and by no means what we expect at the Old Vic” (Illustrated London News). Guardian was unimpressed with the entire triple-bill. Observer delved into the individual items more closely, finding some intrinsic value in each. Times commended the triple-bill for providing new directors and the junior members of the National company with experience and opportunities. The production remained in repertory until 27/7/68.

Comment: Variety said the “corny script” relied too heavily on the deft talent of Irene Handl performing two roles. Without Irene Handl the piece “would be unthinkable: with her, it is just about bearable” (Times). “At times actually gets off the ground in a hilarious way. But at other times something keeps it bogged down, when neither the comedy-farce gets going nor the thriller part grips” (Stage).

Comment: Performed under the collective title You Know I Can't Hear You When the Water's Running. Times said the four pieces were "neatly assembled, quite witty, and profoundly depressing," with Tom Ewell as the "mainstay" of the production. "Not much more than music hall sketches of the kind which went out of fashion 30 years ago, but they are expertly contrived" (Guardian). "An evening of mild bourgeois coarseness" (Observer). "A slight, spasmodically amusing evening" notable for Tom Ewell's appearance in three of the items (Variety). The New York production ran for 756 performances.

Comment: MPS 123. Royal Shakespeare Company. Spectator thought the production was amateurish, tatty, and relied too heavily on the Joan Littlewood style. Observer also noted the indebtedness to Oh What a Lovely War but praised the “magnificent theme and a brilliantly original device for expressing it.” Christian Science Monitor saw it as a parody of Mack Sennett films and westerns “and nearly all of it is uncommonly dull” apart from the final minutes. “In an Indian show one obviously has reservations. Mine are that the symbolic rape scenes are unnecessarily crude and much of the parody misses the target” (Daily Mirror). Variety felt unsure whether an English audience would have the patience to deal with Kopit’s anti-American message. “An earlier title for this bold reworking of American myth was Aspects of the West, and it is a fairer description of the play” (Times). The first New York production (Brooks Atkinson 13/10/69) ran for 96 performances.

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Guardian reported the performance produced much laughter, chiefly through business and mugging. "What begins like a gorgeous romp to redeem a Shakespearian pot-boiler grows into a real experience of comedy" (Times). Terry Hands "has based his conception on the changing structure of the society of that period, and all the relationships arise from this. Falstaff, for example, is for once not so much the bibulous fool as a well-bred gentleman come down a bit in the world" (Stage).

Comment: Guardian explained the genesis of the project and the improvisations that occurred and which remained largely unintelligible to the reviewer. "The production was concerned with The Tempest, used as a means of the players finding themselves, trying to realise their potentialities, testing their talents, getting to know each other in fear as well as in friendly collaboration. The audience was not an audience, or at least not intended to be" (Stage).

Comment: New Shakespeare Company. The production used early Victorian costumes. Variety noted the stage "is now floored instead of being greensward, which may be more durable and practical, but which robs the open air stage of much of its former charm." A "demure" production with occasional "lachrymose punning from Bernard Bresslaw" (Spectator). Times found the production a successful blend of romance and low comedy. "Particularly outstanding is the Proteus of Peter Egan, whose firmness and tremendous stage presence give the production a sense of style and direction" (Stage).

The lady is decidedly good” (Daily Mirror). Times was unenthusiastic about the production and noted additional Gershwin songs had been imported into the piece. Variety reported the piece was received enthusiastically on opening night. Reviews: Christian Science Monitor 16/8/68, 6; Observer 11/8/68, 21; Stage 15/8/68, 7. Comment: The cast displayed “an astonishing virtuosity and fluency” (Christian Science Monitor). Stage panned this “nonsensical pseudo-political” piece.

68.204 Chain of Command (P) Robert Boyden Lamb. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 13/8/68. 1st perf? Cast: Stage 15/8/68, 59. Cain Vass Anderson; Zac Charles Kinross; Mort Stephen Williams. Dir Joan Campbell; Dgn Janet Fenton; Sound, Light Ron Hickey. Review: Stage 15/8/68, 59. Comment: The play concerned “three soldiers, two Americans and a German, in a bombed theatre which becomes their private hell while their true natures are stripped to the core” (Stage).

68.205 The Man with a Load of Mischief (Mus, 2a) Ben Tarver (lyr, bk; based on Ashley Dukes’s play, 1924) and John Clifton (lyr, mus). Comment: MPS 99. Variety reported the theatre had been redecorated, remodelled and was under new management. A good production with commendable performances from Richard Todd, Dilys Laye, and the remainder of the cast (Stage). The New York production ran for 241 performances.

68.206 The Relapse (P) John Vanbrugh. ALDWYCH 15/8/68.  Cast: RSCA; Stage 22/8/68, 13; Theatricalia; WWT/15. Loveless Charles Thomas; Amanda Lynn Farleigh; Young Fashion Michael Jayston; Lory Morgan Sheppard; Waterman Don Henderson; Sir Novelty Fashion (newly created Lord Foppington) Barrie Ingham; Pages Philip Terry, Robert Wilcox; La Varole Peter Geddis; Tailor Roger Rees; Seamstress Ruby Head; Shoemaker William McGuirk; Hosier Frederick Bennett; Wigmaker Sydney Bromley; Coupler Jeffrey Dench; Berinthia Toby Robins; Dr. Serringe Geoffrey Hutchings; Worthy Emrys James; Abigail Christina Greatrex; Maid Susan Sheers; Porter Don Henderson; Sir Tunbely Clumsey Brewster Mason; Miss Hoyden Frances de la Tour; Nurse Lila Kaye; Bull Derek Smith; Sir John Friendly Richard Mayes; Cupid Robert Wilcox; Ladies, Attendants Frederick Bennett, Peter Clay, Ron Daniels, Brian Forster, Christina Greatrex, Ruby Head, Boyd Mackenzie, William McGuirk, Peter Messaline, John Nolan, Gregg Palmer, Roger Rees, John Rogan, Susan Sheers, Philip Taylor. Dir Trevor Nunn; Dgn Christopher Morley; Mus Guy Wolfenden; Light David Read; Wig advisor Kenneth Lintott; Fight arr Donald Burton; Sm Ruth Atkinson, Lynne Holmes; Assist dgn Susan Allen. Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. A revival of the previous season's production but lacking Donald Sinden as Lord Foppington which reduced the comic force of the production. Many in the audience seemed unamused (Guardian). Illustrated London News missed Sinden, but thought Barrie Ingham, his replacement, was a "joy" in his own right.

68.207 The Apprentices (P) Peter Terson. JEANNETTA COCHRANE 19/8/68.* Bagley Barrie Rutter; Mabel Jennifer Galloway; Gareth Thomas, Paula Wilcox, Robert

Comment: National Youth Theatre. The play was about a group of apprentices engaged in various activities during different lunch hours. Daily Mirror reported Terson "describes the work as being just "a lot of people I know, in a place I know, talking about it." Guardian said the play was ideal for the Youth Theatre and was held together by the central role of Douglas Bagley given an excellent performance by Barrie Rutter. Times said the play was a worthy successor to Zigger Zagger: "the whole evening shows the National Youth Theatre up in the best imaginable light." Tribune thought it was a superior play and production to Zigger Zagger. Spectator thought exactly the opposite.

68.208 The Proud Roots (P) George Webb. HAMPSTEAD 19/8/68. 1st perf? Cast: Stage 8/8/68, 15. Pierre Dominique Toussant L'Ouverture George Webb; Ajibade Arimoro, Robert Torbet, Harry Tracey, Lloyd Anderson, Chris Driscoll, Kent Smith, John Barnes, Marleyn Fielder, Rosalind Smith, Richard Norton, Bernard Fernando, Pauline Palmer, Pansy Blythe, Olga Greaves, Sammy Okomilo, Sammy Iddi, Illario Pedro, David Kelvin, Wesley Green, Pauline Gordon, Lucretia Oliver, Elaine Reid, Heather George, Jacqueline Lackan. Dir George Webb; Ch Robin Winbow; Light John Barnes; Sound Caroline Chalklin. The play "deals with the birth of the Negro republic of Haiti" (Stage 8/8/68, 15). Illustrated London News thought the play was "dramatically naive" and the acting merely resolute.

68.209 Trixie and Baba (C, 2a) John Antrobus. Comment:

English Stage Company. "A charade of revue sketches, with a disconcerting air of increasing improvisation" (Variety). Observer found the play funny and praised the acting of Joe Melia and Gillian Martell. A "brilliant play ... The farce is made particularly strong because, with all its clever technical scaffolding, the impact comes directly out of the lives of his two chief characters" (Stage). Daily Mirror described the piece as "every bit as nutty" as The Bed-Sitting Room.

68.210 Dial "M" for Murder (Thriller, 3a) Frederick Knott. RICHMOND 26/8/68. Plot: Best/52, 90, Bordman/4, 309, Fletcher, French, Hischak, Loney, 277, Salem. Comment: A two-week engagement.

68.211 Oh, Clarence (C, 2a) John Chapman (based on P. G. Wodehouse's Lord Emsworth stories). LYRIC 28/8/68. 188 perf. 1st perfd Opera House, Manchester, 29/7/68, as Blandings Castle. Comment: On opening night Wodehouse aficionados found the piece very funny, especially as performed by such "lovable" actors as James Hayter, Peggy Mount, Robertson Hare, Jon Pertwee, and Naunton Wayne (Observer). Variety said it was the cast of veteran actors, not the adaptation, which made the production a success. "When the nostalgia has to stop, very little remains" (Daily Mirror). "An evening of spasmodic gaiety and fitful fun" (Times).

68.212 Diary of a Madman (P) Anon (adpt of Nikolai Gogol's story, 1835). COMMONWEALTH INSTITUTE 30/8/68. Comment: Pan-African Theatre. A charity production in aid of victims of the civil war in Nigeria, and featuring Yemi Ajibade.

68.213 Richard II (T) William Shakespeare. COLLEGIATE 4/9/68. Richard Gareth Armstrong; Bolingbroke

Michael Hadley; Gaunt Alastair Morris; Duke of York Simon Cadell; Mowbray Charles Lewis; Queen Bridget Oakley. Dir Paul Hill; Dgn Humphrey Jaeger. "It was a patchwork performance combining brilliance and mediocrity" (Birmingham Post). "The young players tackle it with spirit and for the most part with firm articulation, a lack in shades of value and clarity of political and emotional exposition being in some measure compensated by these qualities" (Stage).

68.214 Birth of a Notion (FC) Michael Pertwee. RICHMOND 9/9/68.* Cast: Stage 12/9/68, 13. Hawkins Frank Seton; Lucille Gimble Carole Turner; Freddy Gimble Basil Moss; Rodney Percival Peter Myers; Johnny Porter Brian Spink; Mary Porter Sylvia Bidmead; Professor Hogg Derek Royle; Ada Hogg Hazel Douglas; Renato Marato Stephen Gryff; Maria Marato Daphne Palmer. Pres Richmond Theatre Productions Ltd., Brian Rix; Dir Maurice Stewart; Dgn Mary Pickard; Sm Bryan D. Sullivan. Review: Stage 12/9/68, 13. Comment: Derek Royale's "superb skill in every facet of his part somehow makes the whole evening worthwhile, for without his invention—comic, but completely valid within the bounds of the characterisation—the play would be a very dull affair." (Stage). Comment: A two-week engagement.

68.215 Spitting Image (C, 2a) Colin Spencer. HAMPSTEAD 9/9/68; trfd to DUKE OF YORK'S 24/10/68.* Cast: Stage 12/9/68, 13; Variety 18/9/68, 72; WWT/15. Tom Julian Holloway; Gary Derek Fowlds; Doctor, Psychiatrist, Matron, Mr. Dart, Policeman, Home Office Official, Dr. Grapielkoff Frank Middlemass; Registrar, Mrs. Dart, Landlady, Miss Fotheringill Lally Bowers; Sister, Sally, Miss Allen, Nurse Susan Williamson; Attendants Frances Farrer, Anthony Gille. Dir, Dgn James Roose-Evans; Cost dgn Verena Coleman; Light Christopher Bazeley; Sm Rosemary Webb. Comment: Guardian (10/9) said it was a very good play although a little thin, and acted well by Julian Holloway and Derek Fowlds as the homosexual couple who give birth to a child. Observer thought the cast compensated for weaknesses in Spencer's dramatic craftsmanship. "Frequently witty and perceptive, but lacks a strong point of view" (Variety). Times commended much in this "extremely funny play," but noted it also came close to "bathetic solemnity," and had an anti-female element.

68.216 Relatively Speaking (C, 2a) Alan Ayckbourn. INTIMATE 10/9/68. Plot: Demastes/2, Fletcher, French/2, Law, Patterson, Vinson, Weintraub.

68.217 Zigger Zagger (P with mus, 1a) Peter Terson and Colin Farrell (mus). Plot: Fletcher, Griffiths, Vinson, Weintraub. Reviews: Stage 12/9/68, 15; Tribune 13/9/68, 10. Comment: National Youth Theatre. "The weight behind [the play] is the spirited, almost volcanic, chorus of football supporters so dazzlingly orchestrated by Michael Croft in his direction" (Stage).

68.218 Total Eclipse (D, 2a) Christopher Hampton. COURT 11/9/68.* Cast: Findlater; Stage 19/9/68, 15; Variety 25/9/68, 73; WWT/15. Mme Mauté de Fleurville Kathleen Byron; Mathilde Michele Dotrice; Arthur Rimbaud Victor Henry; Paul Verlaine John Grillo; Charles Cros Malcolm Ingram; *M. Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian opined the play might have been more absorbing had it been written from Rimbaud's standpoint, rather than Verlaine's. Variety lauded the performances of Victor Henry and John Grillo but was less happy about the play's episodic structure. Spectator deplored "the excruciating banality" of the dialogue. Illustrated London News faulted Hampton's writing: it "is often needlessly unrestrained, unselective, and some of it adds little to our knowledge of the characters." The first New York production was at the Brooklyn Academy of Music 23/2/74.

Comment: Variety praised the revival and noted the production included fifty-six of the original songs. "A thoroughly zestful production in Regency costume ... with the splendid tunes as fresh as ever" (Illustrated London News). "Punched across in rollicking style by a vivacious company ... in a musical show of tremendous appeal" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: MPS 254. Royal Shakespeare Company. Guardian was disappointed that the play's title did not result in a "splendid satire on the new vogue." It was instead, as Observer pointed out, a remorseless expansion of "a Jewish fable of the human condition under expense-account democracy." Spectator defended the play extensively. "It is a joke about the power of business, written in a tone of savagely articulate farce" (Times). "Savage ... And wordy, very wordy, but with shafts of biting humour on the System beating hell out of the individual" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: The production failed to be as polished as other current musicals in London (Variety). "A forced, more than somewhat insipid frolic overlaid with the requisite dollops of bawdiness" (Stage). "This theatre of rich tradition has slipped ... into a rut of mediocrity. I cannot imagine what prompted the choice of Viva Viva!" (Birmingham Post).

Comment: Guardian did not think much of the play, the subject of which was "equivocal," nor of the "often fussy" acting. Observer called the plot a conflation of The School for Wives, Pygmalion, and Daddy Long-Legs, and said it was agreeable enough. Tribune admired the "technical proficiency” of the production and the admirable performance by Tony Britton. Variety averred the adaptation captured “the 19th century flavor of upper-class Boston.” Times commended Gow for combining a “robust story with an unusual fullness of characterization.”

Comment: Lidove Divadlo Folk Theatre (Czechoslovakia). “An early 19th century comic fantasy ... A party of tourists visit an old castle, wherein stand six figures in 16th century costume, whose story is a local legend, telling how the daughter of the noble owner outwitted three elderly wealthy suitors and gained her father’s consent to her marrying a poor young man of personality and courage. The old characters come to life and re-enact their story” (Stage).

The play was also broadcast by BBC Radio-3 on 24/9/68. Guardian (25/9) thought Joan Plowright was rather wasted on the role of Teresa which was not much more than “a long whine by a deserted woman.” Irish Times suggested the role would have even “taxed Bette Davis in her heyday.” A “pitifully inadequate” play (Spectator). Variety was quite enthusiastic about the piece but wondered whether it was “theatre or literature transferred to the boards.” “The equivalent of a cheap woman’s magazine story ... its appearance on this stage ... a disgrace” (Times). Guardian (28/9) said the piece worked well as a radio play. The production remained in repertory until 22/2/69.

Reviews: Illustrated London News 5/10/68, 31; Stage 3/10/68, 18; Tribune 11/10/68, 11. Comment: Oxford Group Theatre. The play “examines the trials of Benvenuto Cellini and makes them interesting and entertaining for the average theatre goer ... It can be very clearly read as a parable for our times for no advance has been made since the days of Cellini" (Stage). Illustrated London News thought "Franco Colavecchia's set, with its glitter of burnished metal, is the best thing" in the production, and also reported the eight players performed seventy parts.

Review: Stage 3/10/68, 18. Comment: The comedy centered on "the ultimate horror—the fully-emancipated, sexually-free woman politician, veteran of a thousand wordy battles and almost as many bedrooms"; Yvonne Mitchell gave "a remark ably vital performance as Julia, bristling with dynamism and a casual but intense sexuality" (Stage).

Comment: MPS 8. The run was brought to a close when part of the theatre's ceiling collapsed on 20/7/73 (Stage 26/7/73, 1). Variety reported high advanced sales, said the show appealed to all age groups, but had "the big-company overhead"; thus success might be "iffy." "A teenage rave-up with time out for bouts of social significance" (Daily Mirror). Tribune averred the show was not all that original and employed a ragbag of theatrical effects. Times welcomed the piece enthusiastically but noted an earlier off-off Broadway version had a more coherent story line. The production at the Anspacher, New York, ran for 49 performances; a revised version (Biltmore 29/4/68) ran for 1,750 performances.

Comment: English Stage Company. "An essay on the state of the nation in the form of an intricate comedy of intrigue," full of improbabilities, and "the outer and inner parts of the play do not properly mesh" (Times). Tribune felt the play needed a more "farcically-oriented direction." "An awful lot of ado about nothing ... [Cregan] has tried to swipe at far too many targets with insufficient intellectual ammunition" (Illustrated London News).

Performed under the collective title Funny Sunday. "Minton has an original style in explosively comic dialogue but the people he is writing about—and the situations in which they find themselves—are no laughing matter. These pathetic characters are to be pitied;" however, the plays "had many in the audience roaring their heads off" (Daily Mirror). "A number of good performances are wasted on conventional material about suburban myopia and provincial loneliness" (Tribune). "A downbeat evening despite ... hearty, acrid yocks about unpleasant ideas" (Variety). An "over-explicit look at pastel people" (Times).

Zena Walker played a woman who discovers a former lover is carrying on research about chemical warfare without regard for the consequences. She gave a "tautly strained performance" (Variety). "The play rejects dramatic short cuts because Mr. Hale is naturalistically concerned with the way in which things really happen" (Times). Illustrated London News faulted the play for failing to investigate the characters, and so it remained "what it originally was: a rather mediocre play for television—suitably up-dated."

Comment: National Theatre. Guardian thought the play had worn well and was produced with "vivacity and style." However, Christian Science Monitor said the play was lightweight, and Geraldine McEwan, Robert Stephens and Harold Lang failed to capture the "social distinction" and speech of Maugham's characters. Observer acknowledged the play was a piece of popular entertainment; nevertheless "the pace and bourgeoisification [was] carried too far." Times opined the excellent acting and production revealed how undistinguished the play was. The production remained in repertory until 25/4/69. The first New York production, as Too Many Husbands (Booth 8/10/19), ran for 102 performances.

As with Home and Beauty (68. 238) the third act was superfluous (Tribune). Variety predicted the marquee cast would overcome the "indifferent reviews." A "glossy bit of chauvinism" suitable for "Motor Show audiences" (Times). The first New York production, as Absence of a Cello (Ambassador 21/9/64), ran for 120 performances.

Comment: The box office took in over £1,000,000. Guardian said this was a familiar type of "lounge dining-room" comedy, done better by Coward and Maugham, but enjoyable nevertheless, as on the first-night. Christian Science Monitor welcomed this higher-toned comedy, more complex than it appeared, and with a "beautifully easy performance" from Kenneth More. Variety called More's performance "a masterly demonstration of light comedy playing." "The smoothest, most accomplished performance of light comedy for many a year. That is Kenneth More's accomplishment" (Daily Mirror). Times pointed out the improbabilities in the plot but, those overlooked, the piece "goes a long way to reestablishing light comedy as a genre worth respect."

Comment: Open Space Theatre. Guardian said the production was much the same as it was at the Open Space, although the audience was no longer fingerprinted or bullied on its way in; a few audience members did leave before the end of the performance. "I found it a mainly nauseating catalogue of lavatory wall humour" (Daily Mirror). Times welcomed this "excellent play," not least because it "fulfils one of drama's most basic functions: it tells us about an area of life that few of us will ever experience at first hand."

"What does matter is the play's ironic definition of a distinctively southern sensibility, and, near its kernel, a disturbing statement about matriarchy" (Times). "A fairly steamy tale of family life and hard times in contemporary Italy; no great shakes," but with a brilliant performance by Michael Warren Powell (Spectator).

Comment: MPS 124. Royal Shakespeare Company. Spectator indicated the message of the play, like Feiffer's strip-cartoons, was that "American is run by fiends and madmen," and was not particularly persuasive. Christian Science Monitor had a similar reaction to what amounted to "only noise and bitterness ... indifferently acted."

Times concluded Feiffer's "humour and his theatrical sense have been drowned in bile." "All highly satirical but, with so many obvious targets to hit, Mr. Feiffer scores too many near misses and occasionally misfires completely. In fact the play often comes perilously close to being boring" (Daily Mirror). Variety had a more positive reaction.

Comment: MPS 10. A "disturbing allegory of micro-cosmic Nazism" (Tribune). Guardian said the "close intimacy" of the Hampstead made the play lurid, ponderous, and uncommunicative. However, Spectator found the play "strangely gripping" because of Michael Blakemore's direction and the "mesmeric intensity" of Leonard Rossiter as the butler. Times praised the play's "skill, thoughtfulness and theatrical quality."

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Comment: Guardian was happy the production infused the play some measure of vigor. Spectator said Brewster Mason's Caesar, as "a pasty, raddled tyrant," dominated the production, while Ian Richardson gave "a towering performance." "A major reason for hastening to the Aldwych, is Ian Richardson's Cassius, bitterly brooding, icily passionate, responding to every rhythm of the surging verse. This is the finest Shakespearian speaking on the contemporary stage" (Illustrated London News). "A routine piece of work, communicating neither any strongly held view of the play nor any remarkable flair for crowd spectacle" (Times).

Comment: MPS 100. A comedy about the difficulties of finding the perfect family cook in which Dora Bryan played nine different roles. "Poor stuff" (Guardian). "A fifth-hand work" (Spectator). Variety said the piece was really a series of revue sketches that relied very heavily on Dora Bryan's comedic talents which were stretched to the limit. Times said the piece was a variant of the bedroom farce, a kitchen being substituted for a bedroom. Illustrated London News regretted the waste of talent.

Comment: Hochhuth missed the opening because it had been rescheduled (Irish Times). The text had been cut quite extensively, but the play still ran for three hours. Given the subject matter, surprisingly the first night audience showed little outward emotion (Guardian 13/12). John Colicos's performance was praised widely, Observer noting "while he holds the stage, it crackles with theatrical electricity;" Spectator, however, dissented, and found the production "a uniformly tedious evening." Variety said the play was less controversial than expected but might prove too uncomfortable for most audiences. Times decided the play was "unlikely to offend anyone," and reported the first-night audience was "a largely German audience." The first New York production (Billy Rose 1/5/68) ran for 21 performances.

Comment: National Theatre. Tribune called the production "a grievous disappointment" because so much effort had been misspent at the expense of the text itself. New Statesman indicated the production needed more direction from Olivier. "A quiet glory, and the kind of production we expect on the stage of the Old Vic ... we shall recall Olivier's revival as affectionately exact" (Illustrated London News). "An amiable evening" with several good performances, but nothing more (Variety). "The show takes its atmosphere from Carl Tom's décor" (Times). The production remained in repertory until 7/6/69.

Comment: Variety declared "the piece is no longer funny" and it would have difficulty "scraping through its limited engagement" at the small May Fair. "A thoroughly sad and dispiriting evening" with a cast that did not know what acting style to adopt (Times). The play "crumbled dolorously ... It was under-cast and over-strained" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: A traditional pantomime distinguished only by Danny La Rue's drag Queen Passionella (Observer). New Statesman thought La Rue's "range is surprisingly limited ... with his fixed smile, peering shortsightedly forward ... only intermittently funny." Spectator noted La Rue's many accomplishments as a drag artist but observed the pantomime lacked clowns, slapstick, animals, community singing, "and is not only unsuitable but ... deeply boring for small children." Without La Rue in it this was "a very mediocre show indeed" (Times).

Comment: A patriotic play about children who fly around the world and who are guarded by St. George during their adventures. A novel based on the play appeared in 1912. Times noted the piece was played straight and the "clear narrative line" helped to compensate for this dated work.

Comment: English Stage Company. Because of poor attendance initially, during the last two weeks of the production seats were free (Variety 29/1/69, 71, Guardian 12/2/69, 5, Daily Mirror 21/1/69, 13). A "grim but not unamusing naturalistic drama back-dropping the murder of a child by a pervert" (Variety 19/2). Observer thought the play, imperfect though it was, was "a notably humane attempt" at dealing with a difficult subject. Spectator found the play "fascinating, on a fairly superficial, documentary level." The play was written by two sociologists and renewed Times' respect for naturalism.

Comment: MPS 284. Royal Shakespeare Company. Variety reported difficulties in audibility and opined the American accents lacked authenticity, but with good performances by Michael Hordern and Peggy Ashcroft. Guardian said some literal-minded audience members fidgeted and so failed to appreciate this “stupendously intriguing” blend of Chekhov’s Uncle Vanya, and Eliot’s The Cocktail Party. Christian Science Monitor also reported the audience appeared to have difficulty understanding the play; nevertheless, “it received a truly enormous, and very well deserved, ovation.” Times felt Albee was repeating his commercially successful formula established with Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf. The first New York production of this Pulitzer Prize winning play ran for 132 performances.

Review: Stage 23/1/69, 17. Comment: North End Troupe. A modern treatment of Othello “written with the emphasis on colour and sex. This version made me wince and long for its original ... The acting company was undistinguished and several spoke so badly that I thought they were speaking some language other than English” (Stage).

Comment: International Theatre Club. “A proscenium family drama staged, inexplicably, in the square ... [a] domestic commonplace” (Tribune). “An abrupt but shrewdly theatrical comedy in the manner of Iris Murdoch about a family of musical pros,” but a questionable choice for the Mercury (Observer). The possible theme of the play (“the conflict between satisfaction and survival”) was lost in the “excessively ranging dialogue” and irrelevant background material (Times).

Review: Spectator 14/2/69, 216; Stage 6/2/69, 15. Comment: Inter-Action. "This little play is a remarkably perceptive study of character; mainly of the principal protagonist, a blind man who employs a young homosexual to watch the window of a former woman friend and to give a dispassionate, move-by-move account of her actions with her several lovers, but it is also a disturbingly true study of a prim little queer who shows his rather sharp teeth when provoked beyond his narrow limits" (Stage). "Enchanting: short, tart, accomplished, and admirably acted by Richard Pascoe and David Cook" (Spectator).

Comment: MPS 104. The production ran for two hours without an interval. Times said the piece was effective when it stuck to the borrowings from Twelfth Night, but sagged otherwise. "Slipping from olde English prose into cool American idiom, the story is a gentle satire of Uncle Sam's perplexed society, which many young people want to see becoming more tolerant and less martial" (Daily Mirror). Guardian found it pleasant enough with some dull patches, lacking in wit, and with modern "with-it" parallels to Shakespeare's characters. "The rock beat is lively" and the title "means to follow your own bent" (Irish Times). Variety said the piece was visually rather than musically attractive, and was "presented with consummate skill and great enthusiasm" by the small American cast. Illustrated London News generally enjoyed the piece and did not mind the occasional nods to Shakespeare. The New York production ran for 937 performances.

Comment: English Stage Company. The first public performance of the play. Christian Science Monitor usefully summarized the play's censorship history and identified Bond's optimistic motif and the goodness to be found in the character of Len. "A play about brutish people ... not in itself as brutish play" (Times). The play and production received generally sympathetic and appreciative notices.

Comment: The original American cast which left on 10/5/69 to make the film of the play. An English cast took over on 12/5/69. Guardian was impressed by the speed of the first act but said the second was too contrived; however, "the audience lapped it up." Variety declared the piece was inoffensive, "thoroughly funny," and with a "wickedly acid and flip dialog." "It is compelling entertainment. Yes, entertainment" (Daily Mirror). Spectator described the play as a rewriting of "the Loamshire play" with an all-male homosexual cast; it "could scarcely be more English" despite the New York slang. Christian Science Monitor opined many people would be offended by the play, but it was "brilliantly acted" by the all-American cast. Times said it was "a rigid formula piece" and the cast showed "little ensemble vitality." The New York production ran for 1,001 performances.

National Theatre Experimental production. The first performance of four one-act plays by female dramatists: Sheena Mackay, Nurse Macateer; Gillian Freeman, Pursuit; Margaret Drabble, Bird of Paradise; Maureen Duffy, Rites (Plot: Vinson). Observer praised the experiment and singled out Rites as the best piece, while Bird of Paradise contained the "germ" of an interesting play. "All four playwrights seem to have construed their instructions as relating strictly to gynaecological topics, with an occasional glance at geriatrics" (Spectator).

Comment: MPS 109. National Theatre. "The long, sprawling and frequently very boring story is a poker-faced, satiric account of the great mutiny in British India during Victoria's reign" (Daily Mirror). Guardian said that the audience was not enthusiastic about the play which suffered from a lack of organization. Spectator faulted Geoffrey Reeves's very limited direction of "such a rambling and enigmatic text." Illustrated London News commended the cast for getting through the sprawling script. Times averred the piece had "no expressive purpose beyond a devouring interest on the detail of military life." However, Tribune praised Reeves's "disanced, Brechtian production" of this "intellectually demanding" play (Wood's best) in which the "incongruity between action and setting that much of its challenge and its reward derive." The production remained in repertory until 16/5/69.

Comment: The text was cut appreciably. Guardian was impressed by Nicol Williamson’s phrasing of his speeches, and noted the text had been “streamlined.” Illustrated London News was troubled by Williamson’s “harsh and rasping voice,” but commended many other aspects of the production. Observer discussed the merits and demerits of Tony Richardson’s direction and the use of a large thrust stage with the audience on three sides. Christian Science Monitor focused on Williamson’s delivery of the soliloquies at the audience, “almost as if he expected us to contradict him.” After reporting details of the first-night audience, Times declared Williamson’s performance of Hamlet was the first to really escape “the shadow of Gielgud and [annex] it as his own territory.”

20/2/69, 13; Times 19/2/69, 11; Tribune 28/2/69, 11; Variety 26/2/69, 72. Comment: "Simon is hotter on jokes than on plot construction" and the thinness of the three playlets is compensated for by the "exuberant acting by Rosemary Harris and Paul Rogers"; the piece should enjoy a good run (Variety). Christian Science Monitor said the "applause was long and rapturous." Tribune was less enthusiastic, preferring The Odd Couple. Times described how attuned Simon and his plays were to Broadway. The first New York production (Plymouth 14/2/68) ran for 1,097 performances.

Comment: Guardian objected to some changes to the piece but said it could hardly fail with some good performances. Variety thought the production lacked the appropriate style but welcomed the return of Lizbeth Webb to London. "Unashamedly dated, slightly dotty, but undeniably endearing" (Daily Mirror). Times panned the production apart from Lizbeth Webb. The first English version was produced at Daly's 8/6/07.

Comment: English Stage Company. Observer recorded that Bond had, amazingly, written the play in three days: "a funny, subtle, ironic and beautiful play." Tribune said the play was "slightly marred by [Bond's] assertive atheism." While commending the production and play generally, Spectator did object to the literalness of the direction and text. The first New York production (Vivian Beaumont 6/1/72) ran for 44 performances.

Comment: “The audience loved it, applauding Ginger Rogers’s entrances and exits, her songs and, at a pinch, her succession of dresses” (Tribune). Guardian noted the official first night had been preceded by numerous preview and charity performances with the danger that the piece was being oversold; however, the performance was received with “much genuine and unhysterical acclaim.” Variety predicted a good run based on the nostalgia evoked by Ginger Rogers, but pointed to less robust features of the piece when compared with the novel and the play. Times agreed and noted Ginger Rogers only really came alive in act two. The first New York production (Winter Garden 24/5/66) ran for 1,508 performances.

Comment: Performed without an interval. "Strongly fashioned drama of family tension and buried resentment which should make a very wide appeal to playgoers tired of satire and salacity" (Guardian). Observer placed the play among Miller's best and "head and shoulders above all but a handful of [American] plays" of the 1960s. Christian Science Monitor said it was refreshing to see a play place responsibility for failure on the individual and not on society. On the other hand, Spectator found the play "portentous" and "trite," while Tribune felt it was less demanding than earlier works by Miller. "Under Miller's direction the play has more muscle and much more comedy than it showed in New York" (Times). Illustrated London News thought Miller was the "true disciple" of Ibsen. The first New York production (Morosco 7/2/68) ran for 429 performances.

Comment: MPS 42. "The play does have some outrageously farcical moments which are very funny. But its one-track theme of lunacy and sexual deviation becomes boring. Shockingly so" (Daily Mirror). "About the middle of the second act the gallery began to comment. 'Does this make sense to any of you?' asked one of the characters. 'It doesn't,' replied a voice from above ... The ultimate reception was a mixture of gallery booing and cheers from below" (Illustrated London News). Guardian reported similar details of the audience's responses. Spectator found the production "extremely odd," because of mixed styles and the miscasting, notably of Ralph Richardson; but good performances from Coral Browne and Peter Bayliss. Observer faulted the cast for failing to understand how Orton's lines needed to be delivered. "Orton's terrible obsession with perversion ... poisons the atmosphere and the play" (Christian Science Monitor). Tribune opined Orton would have "relished the irony of his improper little play getting the full establishment treatment," but would have revised it prior to production. Times agreed the play seemed like an early draft and also adhered to Orton's "mechanical formula." Variety wondered why any management would think the play worth staging. The first New York production (McAlpin Rooftop Theatre 4/5/70) ran for 224 performances.

Comment: The play was about a Parliamentary committee being more concerned with political gamesmanship than with actually deliberating the provisions of a piece of legislation. Observer liked the idea in the play but found it too overextended for a two-acter. Guardian viewed the play favorably and said it was well acted and received. "Uncommonly engaging ... impressive authenticity" (Spectator). "A funny, slight piece about political ineptitude," and ultimately superfluous (New Statesman). Times attributed the play's success to Exton's dialogue and its "rich satiric flair."

Comment: English Stage Company. The first public performance of the play. New Statesman did not doubt Bond's honesty but thought he needed to justify his despair within the play. Guardian "found some of it boring but a lot quite original and strange," after the manner of Strindberg's The Dream Play. Observer declared it was a very funny "wild Victorian dream-world," but not "wholly successful." Variety opined most playgoers would be confused and baffled by the play, and it failed to be either farcical or satirical. "A solipsistic muddle; confusingly plotted and projecting a wrathfully infantile view of existence" (Times).

Comment: Barrie Humphries in several of his impersonations, including Edna Everage. The show was generally well received, although Variety thought "a little of him goes a long way." "A series of solo sketches, designed to prove just what a vapid place Australia is, apparently replete only with beer, dried fruit, intellectual pseuds, Thermos flasks and vomit" (Observer).

Comment: English Stage Company. Observer said that the "lack of coherence bewilders a lot of people," but the play still deserved to be seen. Times averred that for those who could attune themselves to the piece it was "the closest theatrical equivalent to the drug experience." The New York production ran for 29 performances.

Comment: The play is also known as The Automobile Graveyard. “The staging ... was blessed with a good set, a gaudy mountain of used cars, and an imaginative production. Without these and fairly snappy performances things could have fallen flatter than flat” (Stage). “The Tavistock people—the director is Clyde Jones—have done the thing as ably as possible. Tom Tillery’s sensitive performance is something to recognize and respect. But it will take much special pleading to persuade me that this kind of piece ... needs to be debated reverently as a contribution to the stage” (Illustrated London News). Daily Mirror reported the Mayor of Islington and his wife left the performance because they were embarrassed by the content.

Comment: MPS 125. Royal Shakespeare Company. Guardian said that the play was “dull, feebly vulgar, and unrewarding,” Warren Mitchell was “quite amusing,” Megs Jenkins was wasted on her role, and Patrick Magee was “dreadfully miscast.” Mitchell “looked a lot like old Alf [Garnett], sounded a bit like him at times, but wasn’t nearly so outrageously funny. Subdued giggles a-plenty, but few belly laughs” (Daily Mirror). Variety called it an “uneasy comedy” scheduled for only a few performances and thought a commercial production “questionable.” Spectator wondered how “this dim little piece” reached the stage. “Gray has tried to combine the tradition of popular British vulgarity with modern fashions in kinkery and violence,” a theme hinted at by the “garish poster” outside the Aldwych in the style of Donald McGill’s vulgar seaside postcards (Times).

WIMBLEDON 7/4/69.* Cast: Stage 10/4/69, 15; WWT/15. Dr. Peter Estriss George Cole; Dr. Walter Messenger James Villiers; Amanda Estriss Moira Redmond; Victor Lance Ron Randell. Pres James Verner, Allen Hodshire; Dir Philip Grout; Dgn Tim Goodchild; Sm Roy Britton. Review: Stage 10/4/69, 15. Comment: "It is partly a sex-comedy, partly a bedroom farce, and partly a satire on psychiatry ... The trouble with the play is ... that it is not libidinous enough for its first purpose, too slow-moving for its second, and not sufficiently involved for its third" (Stage). A proposed West End production failed to materialize.

69.86 The Tingalary Bird (P for children, 3a) Mary Melwood. ARTS 7/4/69. Comment: Unicorn Theatre.

69.87 Cilli Wang. ARTS 8/4/69. Review: Stage 10/4/69, 15. Comment: Cilli Wang "moves with the grace of a dancer, creates character with an incredible economy of gesture and touches everything with a sense of gentle humour" (Stage).

69.88 Gertrude Stein's Gertrude Stein (One-woman show) Nancy Cole. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 8/4/69. Review: Stage 17/4/69, 14. Comment: Performed by Nancy Cole. Comment: A charity preview was given on 14/4/69 in aid of the National Youth Theatre. "A sprightly and amusing" production with Richard Briers giving a perfectly timed performance (Variety); Guardian expressed a similar view. "The large cast is without exception excellent, on a level seldom attempted or achieved outside the subsidised companies" (Spectator). While describing the production as "managerial opportunism," Times conceded it was a success.

"Here and there a useful libretto, now and again pleasant music, but all, I fear, in a despairing cause" (Illustrated London News). Variety reported the piece lacked the female emancipation element of the novel; moreover, the musical element was poor, the cast "has minimal marquee draw and [there are] dull, ugly, malfunctioning (opening night) sets." Guardian complained about the "dated staging." "An unpretentious though not very memorable attempt to set Wells's social conscience to music" (Tribune). "Earnest, well-intentioned, unadventurous and often as flimsy as its swaying scenery" (Daily Mirror).

"Cast to perfection and directed with unpretentious realism by Lindsay Anderson" (Guardian). Observer was disappointed that the play was little more than a working-class Dear Octopus. "Storey's greatest strength is his eye for social detail and his ability to change the mood of a scene without any crashing of gears" (Times). Variety said the play was gripping, well-written, reminiscent of Ibsen and O'Neill, and contained splendid performances from Bill Owen, Alan Bates, and Brian Cox. Tribune thought Storey had really written two plays, neither of which was realized on stage.

Comment: MPS 130. Illustrated London News described the play as "either a fantastic, mannered comedy for two people, or an allegory of crumbling Britain." Observer said that instead of being boldly satirical the play ended up being "dimly saucy." For Variety Leonard's "lively, jokey dialog" was insufficient to support his satirical intent, further limited by the play being a two-hander. "Episodic but engaging ... essentially anecdotal" and not adding up to much (Tribune). Times said the play's "comic allegory" failed to convince because it did not "grow out of a plausible realistic situation." The first New York production (Vivian Beaumont 27/12/73) ran for 37 performances.

Comment: The play was performed without an interval. Times said the production was "solid, workmanlike," but the lack of star performers revealed the "deficiencies of the text." The play was "hammered along at speed by an adventurous amateur cast, Peter Dawson and Joanne Harding particularly good" (Illustrated London News). The first New York production (Ambassador 3/3/66) ran for 92 performances.

"I've seldom seen a more perfectly integrated, utterly finished production, planned and executed with deliberate artistry down to its smallest detail," but lacking in moments of spontaneity (Observer). Tribune said the production possessed "very formal purity" but "lacked soul." Times said the production highlighted the play's "vein of hysteria" which worked well in the first two acts but not the last two.

Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 1/5/69. Guardian regretted Geraldine McEwan could not match "the musical elegance" of Edith Evans's performance as Millamant. Spectator opined neither the director nor the cast really grasped the outer and inner workings of the play. However, Tribune thought Michael Langham was attempting “to strip away the veneer of verbal ‘style,’ and to lay bare the real coarse-grain of the Restoration mind instead.” Christian Science Monitor was satisfied that two key scenes came off well: “in both Gerald McEwen shines with the lazy ease of a fine lady who thinks it inelegant to show enthusiasm.” Times was impressed by the production’s clarity in presenting both the plot and the text. The production remained in repertory until 29/4/69.

Comment: MPS 45, 68. “It’s a gaudy, brash, cheerfully vulgar musical about the feudin’ and fussin’ days in Las Vegas 100 years ago. Two, or maybe three, of the fourteen songs lift the musical out of the rut into which the woeful dialogue tends to push it, but the show is disappointing. It probably qualifies as one of the noisiest-ever musicals” (Daily Mirror). “‘What shall I do now?’ asked one of the minor characters ... and a voice, far off near the roof, said—with an awful clarity—‘Drop dead.’ During the remainder of this curious night the gallery restrained itself. The only sound that penetrated to the stalls was a sad response to Betty Grable’s emotional speech of thanks, ‘Come back again in a better show’” (Illustrated London News). Tribune left "The plot tells the story of a dying old man who is forced to watch his wife being unfaithful with the houseboy. The wife, played by 23-year-old Flora Lushington, and the houseboy, played by Nathaniel Norward, also 23, are the characters who appear nude" (Daily Mirror). Variety reported a news conference about the piece: "There's no news like good nudes." Times reported that the audience numbered approximately 150.

Comment: 69 Theatre Company. Guardian concluded that, instead of high comedy acting, the piece was given “only pleasant English film comedy acting.” However, Observer commended Tom Courtenay who continued to cement his reputation as a leading actor of his generation, a view contradicted by Spectator’s terse “dismally crabbed as Marlow.” Times was doubtful about the mixing of comedy and farce. Illustrated London News thought the production was the equal of other recent revivals.

Comment: Negro Ensemble Company (New York). World Theatre Season. The play, about an attempted lynching, possessed “an engaging nonchalance and a brisk, airy wit” (Spectator). Tribune found the piece “a profoundly religious albeit not reverent work.” “It tries to cross-fertilize the Everyman legend with the world of evangelist meetings, jazz parades, and minstrel shows” (Times). The New York production ran for 32 performances.

Comment: Park Theatre Company. A static, thinly written play (Guardian). “In this strange two-hour offering there is precious little to laugh at. And nothing to admire but the actors’ staying power” (Daily Mirror). Tribune enjoyed “this unpretentious verbal frolic,” but reported a sparse audience was in attendance. “A flimsy, jokey allegory which runs out of steam in the first 20 minutes” (Variety). “The play takes off into passages of bravura, financial calculation, erotic farce, and local political satire which seldom sag and which provide material for excellent obsessive farcical performance” (Times). “The Park Theatre Company at the Fortune Theatre is a fore-runner to Howard & Wyndham’s much larger, more comprehensive Off-West End project which hopefully will be situated in Hyde Park, on the disused building between the Albert Memorial and the Serpentine. This development envisages the building of two auditoriums (one large, one small) and will be used primarily to find, encourage and develop new work; work that might not necessarily get its chance in the commercial West End” (programme note).

Comment: Greek Art Theatre Company. World Theatre Season. Guardian reported a full house responded warmly to this rowdy and bawdy production. However, Times reported “it still comes as a shock to see [the play] so firmly anchored in politics rather than sex.” Spectator agreed “this production concentrates on the play’s political rather than its sexual implications,” but described in detail how the sexual aspects were portrayed. “Strangely unerotic” (Tribune).

Comment: Guardian thought Marowitz’s adaptation lacked coherence and had nothing new to say. Observer expressed a similar view of this “scissors-and-collage version ... a college essay on the play’s thematic imagery.” Tribune was similarly inclined. “A singularly tame production” (Times). “A dire waste of time ... The current pretentious business proves nothing, though I recall some impressive unison speaking” (Illustrated London News).

69.137 The Fantasticks (Mus, 2a) Tom Jones (bk, lyr; suggested by Edmond Rostand, Les romanesques, 1894) and Harvey Schmidt (mus). LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 21/5/69. Plot: Bordman, Bordman/5, 617, Fletcher, Gänzl, Kennedy, OTF, Shipley, Wilmeth.

Comment: Greek Art Theatre Company. World Theatre Season. Guardian noted the controlled, slow pace of the production, “an evening of sustained oratory.” Times noted the production eliminated the “tragic voice,” but said what replaced it did not have “any discernable expressive intention.” “Gusts of a fiercer humour come whistling between the lines. One has a sense of the absurdity of these puny, dwarfish bunglers confronting forces hopelessly beyond their reach” (Spectator). As with Lysistrata (69.135) the play needed a better sense of direction (Tribune).

69.139 Strike (P) Arnold Hinchcliffe. UNITY 23/5/69.* Reviews: Tribune 16/5/69, 13, 6/6/69, 11. Comment: The play was about events leading up to 1926 general strike. Tribune (6/6) said that it managed to capture “the paradoxes of the situation.”

69.142 Staircase (CD, 2a) Charles Dyer. RICHMOND 26/5/69. Plot: Fletcher, Griffiths, Gunn, Hischak, Salem, Vinson, Weintraub. Comment: A two-week engagement. “A group of twenty National Front Party agitators stormed a theatre last night—and were put to flight by an 80-year-old usherette. The group, some in leather jackets, were protesting against a play about homosexuals called Staircase ... The protesters jumped up at the start of the second half but they reckoned without Mrs. Constance Pearce. She stormed down the aisle and told them to get out. And with a good hefty push they did—into the arms of waiting police. But none were arrested” (Daily Mirror 5/6/69, 7).

"A modern dress version of The Bacchae all set with unflinching realism in a ladies' lavatory ... often shamelessly funny in a picture postcard or music hall style" (Guardian). Geraldine McEwan gave a "glorious performance ... as the chief attendant" (Tribune). "An amusing, but also biting grim, black comedy ... directed with panache, as well as understanding" (Stage). The production remained in repertory until 24/6/69.

"The theme that the Ensemble explored was loneliness and their explorations were by way of short items which were, on the whole, successful. Some of these pieces were amusing and some touching, as in an accurate pastiche on the sort of novels James Hilton specialised in" (Stage).

Comment: Guardian reported that the first-night audience responded enthusiastically, but noted there were difficulties with the microphone and loudspeaker Joan Turner used. Variety acknowledged Turner's several talents but thought she needed "a well-produced, disciplined routine"; the audience was indulgent but skimpy. Times said Joan Turner's "comic ability" was not "big enough to make good her technical imprecision."

Comment: Anna Magnani Company (Rome). World Theatre Season. Guardian complained the production began thirty minutes late, had an extremely long interval, and was "all rather like Wagner without music." Times also complained about the late start and lengthy interval, and said the piece would be nothing without Anna Magnani playing Pina "as a peasant Phèdre." Anna Magnani conveyed "a sombre and melancholy vision of la lupa's thwarted passion" (Spectator).

Comment: New Shakespeare Company. Richard Digby Day “brings the play forward to the mid- nineteenth century: it is decorative, and it is one way of taking our minds off the oddities of the narrative in Verona, Milan, and a forest between them” (Illustrated London News). “A huge, shambling, extraordinarily funny Launce—yes, Bernard Bresslaw” (Observer). “The play seems to transpose especially well to an exterior setting and at no time do the surroundings seem incongruous” (Times).

Comment: Times lamented that a young writer and young cast had wasted so much energy on this “rambling, self-indulgent and exhausting guide to the modern entertainment scene.” “All concerned are in need of a good course of self-criticism and some severe lessons in learning how to make the best of themselves and their material” (Stage).

Comment: Living Theatre Company. Guardian complained the production failed to make use of the Round House as a perfect place for “total epic theatre.” Spectator condemned the, apparently intended, “verbal banality” employed by the company. Times pointed to the “production’s many passages of visual brilliance” and concluded “it is a pity that the company have not been able to eliminate language altogether.”

Comment: The work was a collage of “The Trial of Abbie Hoffman’s Shirt by the United States Government,” and “A Trial of Commune 1 by the City of West Berlin.” “The evening is vastly unruly and ill-disciplined but it just doesn’t matter in this representation of two idiotic youth trials, one in America and the other in Germany, because the show has such vitality and life” (Stage).

Comment: Living Theatre. Times discussed the contradictions in the company’s purported aims, and concluded “it seems that their real intention is not to change society but to confirm their contempt for the conventional public.” Daily Mirror reported the police were called to the first performance: “But it wasn’t the seminude scene that dismayed them. It was the dancers breaking fire regulations, which say that an audience must be seated. The audience had started stripping at the invitation of the cast.”

Comment: Tribune disliked the musical, but conjectured it was really an unconscious allegory about American involvement in Vietnam. Variety opined Richard Kiley, the original Broadway Don Quixote, would be “a box-office asset.” The revival had “no loss of vigour, pace or gusto” (Times).

Comment: MPS 1146 (for a 1980 production of Jack Sheppard in Leicester). The piece was about the life and times of Jack Sheppard which, ultimately, was played for crude laughs (Guardian). Observer entertained a completely opposite view and reported the audience was delighted. New Statesman (18/7) averred the piece was just as appealing as the Mermaid's Lock Up Your Daughters. A "roguish period farce melodrama and a good if uneven show" (Variety). Times pointed out Campbell's intention was to highlight how Jack Sheppard was exploited "for the profit of the law-abiding."

Comment: MPS 69. Tribune said the music was very dismal, and the piece should have been a straightforward courtroom drama. "Charles Lewsen captures the quirky, irrepressible, publicity-seeking man of God" (Daily Mirror). Observer thought Lewsen gave "a touching, chirpy performance." Times welcomed the piece wholeheartedly. "Charles Lewsen tried to make a volatile innocent of Davidson, on whom we seemed to be spying. 'Rubbish!' said a final voice from the gallery. The verdict was inescapable; and the play has vanished (Illustrated London News).

Comment: MPS 97. Variety reported this was a vehicle for Hermione Gingold: "The first night audience hysterically greeted every line uttered and every movement of this droll"; however, the play itself was old-fashioned and untidy. This "mediocre" piece was "about a multiple spy with galloping nymphomania" that even Hermione Gingold could do little with (Tribune). "You'd have to be a Gingold fan to enjoy it at all, but those at the first night obviously did so extravagantly" (Observer). "Tanitch has provided simply a set of pretexts for Miss Gingold to display her famous mannerisms to the still loyal public" (Times).

Comment: Bread and Puppet Theatre of America. Guardian described the company's efforts as "lively and earnest" and "endearing," although the production was somewhat vague in intent, and rather dated as experimental theatre. New Statesman called it "a sort of miracle cycle" that really belonged on the street corner and that possessed "an ideological glibness." Times stressed the sincerity of the company's intentions and found the production effective as "a modern equivalent of medieval street theatre." Illustrated London News could recall only "the fuss in preparing for each scene: the adjustment of new masks, the placing of lights, the sweeping round of masses of shredded newspaper, the mountain of effort for a mouse of effect."

Comment: MPS 126. Royal Shakespeare Company. Tribune averred the double bill "shows off Pinter at his best." "Both impeccably" directed, with first-rate performances (Guardian). Landscape was "a short masterpiece" (Times). Variety dissented from the general praise calling the "70 minutes of playing time" an "unsatisfying evening," and the plays actionless and the dialogue repetitive. Illustrated London

News agreed: "The dramatist has nothing in particular to say. What he offers is an exercise in speech rhythms that would become soporific if it were not for the prestige of his name—hopefully we suppose that something must surely happen." The first New York production (Forum 2/4/70) ran for 53 performances.

Comment: MPS 138. About the frustrations of a young husband trapped in domesticity and wanting advancement in life, which threatens his wife and mother. "A rarity ... a play that is in turn warmly compassionate, theatrically intense and blazingly funny" (Daily Mirror). Guardian found the play ultimately satisfying, with good acting by John Alderton and Pauline Collins. Variety thought the play too long and contrived "but engrossing." Tribune held a similar opinion. "Familiar ground and familiar types—angry, dreaming young husband, steady, decent wife, bitter, jealous mother are covered with little sign of a new approach or fresh ideas" (Stage). Times described it as "a shifty piece of work" that did little but milk situations for "easy effects."

Comment: MPS 75. A "competent and effective drama" that holds its audience

(Guardian). "It turns into an unusually literate and gripping courtroom drama" (Observer). Spectator pointed to the play's affinities with other dramas, but commended England for being "both adroit and enigmatic," as all very good melodramatists are. The only element Times could fault was the slightly disappointing denouement. Variety was more impressed by the "excellent casting, direction and mounting" than by the play itself. The first New York production (Ethel Barrymore 12/10/70) ran for 144 performances.

muddled, slapdash and witless. The characterisation is shallow, the comment stale, the technique crudely imitative, Beckett and Ionesco being particularly noticeable" (Stage).

Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 31/7; apparently there were no previews. All five parts of Shaw's cycle were described as "a metabiological pentateuch," and were first performed in England at the Repertory, Birmingham, 9/10/23–12/10/23. A one-night and shortened version of the entire play was performed on 27/5/70 (Stage 4/6/70, 13). Ob- server described the cycle as "rewriting the Cinderella-plot of Pygmalion as a Wellsian fairy tale: the story of the parlour-maid who lives to be 300 ... It is fairly good comic fantasy." Spectator wondered whether the entire production was worth the effort, time, and money expended upon it. Variety called it "an imaginatively splendid production," and noted the five parts had been reduced to about five hours of playing time presented over two nights. "One of the [National Theatre's] most signal artistic failures ... What is most disappointing is the triviality with which Shaw has invested his theme" (Christian Science Monitor). The production remained in repertory until 23/8/69. The original Part One was first performed in New York at the Garrick 27/2/22. See also 69.213.

The production "manages to get to the heart of the comedy as naturally as if it was a mirror of our own society" (Guardian). Variety said William Gaskill's direction and the acting were both uneven, a view echoed by Tribune. For Times the production consisted of "sharply isolated moments" and overall it lacked "a purposeful flow of dramatic energy."

Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 1/8/69; apparently there were no previews. Times said this part two revealed Shaw's "prophesy is without dramatic life or internal coherence. [H. G.] Wells, the scientist, could imagine the future: Shaw, who put all his trust in imagination, merely rakes together a collection of gimcrack details." The production remained in repertory until 23/8/69. See also 69.211.

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. "It is a curious low keyed production ... set in a large barn-like structure and seemingly taking place mainly by night. This makes the first half of the play rather heavy going and although Janet Suzman's Beatrice and Alan Howard's Benedict are personable and charming enough, they seem a bit short on the wit" (Stage). Tribune described the production as "a sort of baroque folly—an unwieldy accumulation of bits and pieces and bright ideas." Guardian and the first-night audience were pleased by the production, with successful performances by Janet Suzman and Alan Howard. "A gorgeous piece of comic ensemble" (Times).

The play was about "the reasons for Pearl's frigidity, and pretty unconvincing and maudlin they are too. Indeed, it is some time since so many bad lines were all assembled together under the same roof" (Spectator). "A trite little affair, with dull, thudding wisecracks, and plenty of grimy innuendo" (Variety). Tribune did not think the play was as bad as other critics said, but nevertheless left the theatre after just two acts. The play provided four good actable parts (Times).

69.216 The Preacher (P) Alex Oduro. ROUND HOUSE 8/69. 6 perf. Review: Daily Mirror 30/7/69, 9. Comment: Placenta Arts. "Dealing with the tragic but factual division of our universal Race, the play is a drama/musical that demands the undivided attention of all. It will call to your notice the ever-sad and soul-destroying core of misguided harmony integration Through ghetto life and its throbbing opiate-music, rape, murder and lesbianism, the plot and characters develop, unfold to expose that haven/heaven of sorts where schism rests undisturbed and reigns supreme with humanity split into two ...' And who said hokum was dead" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: Fenella Fielding was cast originally for the role of Rose, but left the production because of interpretative differences with Bernard Miles (Times 23/7/69, 11). The production ran for three hours. "A generally tedious evening at the theatre" (Variety). For Observer the cast failed to be convincing in their character portrayals, although James was also to blame. The play "should properly have been left to the forgiving innocence of obscurity" (Guardian); Christian Science Monitor defended the play. Times described the piece as a lifeless "clockwork melodrama," with plodding acting. Illustrated London News provided a history of the play's composition.

Comment: Park Theatre Company. Performed under the collective title Lovers. Irish Times provided a digest of the critics' notices. "Really two unconnected short plays which have in common only a relentless Irishness ... pathos sliding into bathos," and resembling a parody of Our Town (Guardian). Times also noted the echoes of Our Town. Observer thought Losers was the better play, "but it is not strong enough to redeem the evening." "A slight but beguiling evening" (Variety). Tribune said the double-bill was thin, "too well-made," ponderous, and pretentious. The first New York production (Vivian Beaumont 25/7/68) ran for 148 performances.

Comment: Variety said this musical spoof could be successful because it possessed charm and lampooned 1930s musicals affectionately rather than snidely, a view shared by Observer. Guardian reported the piece was well received on opening night but called it an "unutterably tedious bit of nonsense," laying the blame at the feet of the authors and the composer. "When [the book] guys the admittedly absurd conventions of the showbiz musical, it is frequently crude and heavy handed" (Times). The first New York production ran for 575 performances.

Plot: Vinson, Weintraub. Reviews: Guardian 4/9/69, 10; Stage 4/9/69, 15. Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian praised the play but faulted its "stylistic discrepancies"; John Normington exhibited "splendid ... technical skill" in his two roles. Stage noted Brenton "writes so well, with sharp, economical dialogue, clear, keen character strokes, and a knack for rapidly creating atmosphere, that one wonders just how his work would be if more elaborately developed and fuller in content.”

Myers objected to the production because his script had been mutilated badly by Ashmore (see Guardian 2/9/69, 1, 3/9/69, 18; Stage). Not James’s novel dramatized, but “a conventional drawing room drama” (Guardian 3/9). “Bogs down in involved plotting and drastic miscasting” (Observer). “The kernel of tense drama is dissipated by too much fluffy dialog and acting” (Variety). “A very nicely designed stage machine” (Times).

Comment: MPS 134. A children’s birthday party (off-stage) provides the back-drop for a series of marital crises between two couples. Observer recognized the play was only “skin-deep” and enjoyed it, while Guardian did not. Variety said the play tried to be too witty and so its point “fails to emerge and the situation lacks depth.” Times said the authors “still make us laugh while working out elaborate comic schemes and coincidences, and they make sure the players enjoy themselves as well” (Times).

Comment: The plot involved the trials and tribulations of Henry Oldershaw, the headmaster of an ancient grammar school. Variety thought the show’s success depended on Andrew Cruickshank’s admirers turning up to see his performance in this “silly play.” “Hamming, mugging, call it what you will, there’s no better exponent of it than Andrew Cruickshank when it is needed to inject life into a play. But I doubt whether even he has ever been called upon in the past to pull quite so many faces or display such a variety of vocal tricks as he does in the role of schoolmaster Henry Oldershaw” (Daily Mirror). “It is sad to see an actor of such presence and gravity and humour as Mr. Cruickshank lumbered with such a hopeless play” (Guardian). “The play is so blandly sure of its own scruples ... that it ends up irredeemably trivial” (Tribune).

Comment: Guardian thought everything about the production and play was "all very second rate," although the audience seemed to enjoy it. However, Observer declared it was "an unusually intelligent comedy" with complex characterizations. Tribune found the play acceptable if it was not taken too earnestly. "An unmerited, dim-witted, even obnoxious title ... the old sex war, is no great shakes, but it does tend to be entertaining" (Variety). Times averred "in the spite of an abundance of sly genital allusions, this is really a safe, traditional piece of West End comic machinery."

Reviews: Christian Science Monitor 4/10/69, 10; New Statesman 26/9/69, 440. Comment: Traverse Theatre Company. "A tour de force" (Christian Science Monitor). "It is either for men with babyish notions of women, or for women with girlish notions of themselves ... but the whole thing is fluently put together, an occasional line bites, and the panache with which Mr. Eveling carries off his shameless con suggests that when he finds a subject he'll have the nerve for it" (New Statesman).

Comment: MPS 107. Posket, the magistrate, is "one of the best things [Alastair Sim] has done" (Guardian). Variety said the marquee cast would assure a long run. "An impeccably timed performance" (Tribune). "The machine-made plot ... never fails to amuse by its ingenious contrivances, but add stylish acting and direction and the result is irresistibly funny" (Stage). "An evening of rare, intoxicating pleasure," with "exemplary" direction (Times). The first New York production was at Daly's 7/10/1885.

Comment: MPS 112. The production featured a transparent-sided swimming pool on stage. "A rather unfunny suburban pool-side farcical comedy, with many witless lines and rather frantic mugging" (Guardian). "Its fleeting revelations of nudity are as crushingly decorous as Queen Alexandra removing a strand of pearls" (Observer). "Many of the faces in last night's audience positively glistened. They could have been splashed by the swimming pool: but I think they were damp with delight" (Times). Variety entertained doubts whether "the party-coach trade" could make the piece a success. "It is the worst acted farce I've seen on any stage—and that takes in village hall and end of the pier entertainment. It is quite diabolical" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: Prospect Productions. Observer praised Ian McKellen for treating his role as a character and not as an abstract emblem of kingship. Times discoursed extensively on McKellen's "audacious, powerful, and memorable performance." "The most apt word for Ian McKellen's portrayal of the king—majestic. It's a towering performance in a role which isn't easy to make credible" (Daily Mirror, 25/9). Variety praised McKellen but complained that "the homosexuality is being over-explicitly shown, with abundant male kissing."

Comment: "Loudly declaimed and acted for the most part with the broad strokes of circus comedy" (Guardian). Observer enjoyed the "marvellous moments of pure theatre," but objected to Barrault's support of the student revolt as some sort of new Renaissance. Christian Science Monitor described how various parts of the Old Vic had been adapted by Barrault, including placing part of the audience on the stage.

Comment: Prospect Productions. Variety said the roles of Richard and Edward (69.268) established Ian McKellen "as one of the outstanding young actors of the postwar generation." Daily Mirror devoted almost an entire page (entitled "The new Olivier from Wigan market") to McKellen: "Certainly very few actors, apart from Olivier, could be doing in London what McKellen has done since September 23. He is drawing crowds of young people to the Mermaid Theatre to see him play, on different nights, the demanding lead roles in Shakespeare's complex Richard II and Marlowe's lustful, bloody Edward II. The plays were a sellout before they opened! There is a black market in tickets. Critics have raved at the depth, the intensity, the power of McKellen's performances. He is a theatrical event."

The first New York production (Shubert 1/12/68) ran for 1,281 performances.

Miss Rawls has great charm, she is obviously devoted to Fanny Kemble, she reads too quickly, and, finally, we come away and forget immediately.”

involved a wife who loses her three-month old baby and takes up painting imaginary infants, to the despair of her husband. "Irene Coates tortures a basically simple narrative" (Illustrated London News). Stage declared the play "would be practically unbearable without the brilliant performances of Ronald Lewis and Anna Massey in the leading parts ... [of this] pretentious, sticky mess of symbolism and protest."

Comment: MPS 149. National Theatre. Press night was 16/10; apparently there were no previews. Tribune was troubled by the numerous overlapping styles and the attempt to generate comedy out of human pain. "Not a play but an extravaganza: a documentary revue ... mocking our attitudes to the healing arts by juxtaposing parody with reality" (Observer). Spectator praised the performances of Charles Kay and Bernard Gallagher. Nichols has produced "another off-beat entry of brilliance and importance, superbly produced," although it is rather long and "certainly not for the squeamish" (Variety). Times (17/10) praised Nichols as the only British dramatist capable of portraying "modern Britain on stage" and then sending "the spectators away feeling more like members of the human race." Illustrated London News dubbed it the year's best play and praised the entire cast. In 1971 Times (20/1) complained about the withdrawal of the production from the National's repertoire while "generally acknowledged duds are being held over well into the next booking period." The production stayed in repertory until 18/3/72. See also Lloyd Evans, 164–68. The first New York production was at the Circle in the Square Uptown 10/10/74.

Comment: MPS 101. Tribune described the piece as "a well-and-truly complicated farce about three pregnant women, five babies, an ingenuous clergyman, an obsessive gambler ... the few feeble lines are redeemed by some unusually subtle visual business." A "below-par entry by the usually reliable Brian Rix" (Variety). Times controverted that view saying the piece "shows an immense development in comic skills compared to the lumbering old days in the Whitehall."

Comment: MPS 176. English Stage Company. Observer (19/10) reported Storey used to work for a company that erected tents and the same firm had won the contract for the marquee used on stage at the Court. Observer (26/10) pointed out the play was "a subtle and poetic parable about the nature and joy of skilled work, the meaning of community and the effect of its loss." Variety echoed that judgment and said Storey was growing as an important dramatist. Tribune praised the play: "its theatricality consists in a quiet, insistent truth to life." Christian Science Monitor said Storey was able to evoke the same sort of melancholy to be found in Chekhov's plays. The first New York production was at the Brooklyn Academy of Music 17/10/73.

69.287 Oh What a Lovely War! (Mus ent, 2a) Charles Chilton et. al. Comment: The play concerned two female confidence tricksters, but Times found the plot thin and repetitive. Variety said this "slight-weight" play had received mixed receptions during tryouts at Edinburgh and at the O'Keefe Centre in Toronto (8/4/69), but it might "click" with undemanding audiences. Bruce "Forsyth, with the resources at full flow of a music hall sketch comedian rather than a straight actor creating a part of some length, is very amusing and he takes his own expert opportunity of making the best of every situation and line" (Stage).

Plot: Vinson. Reviews: New Statesman 24/10/69, 588; Observer 9/11/69, 32; Stage 23/10/69, 20. Comment: "A wordy sex-drama" (New Statesman). "Fiercely and genuinely felt" with very intense acting (Observer). "Very much a 'restricted audience' play, a play to be enjoyed and crowded over by its special group and which will, almost certainly, bore everyone else" (Stage).

Comment: MPS 231. The opening of a new theatre built in the shell of the former Hippodrome music hall. "Hardly a play at all. For long stretches it is a lantern show" (Guardian). Observer said the script was intelligent, was acted "with energy and conviction," and was well received on the first-night. While commending the piece generally, Times thought it had overlooked minor but significant details of King's life.

69.291 Meet Lynne Bretonn (One-woman show). LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 21/10/69. Review: Stage 30/10/69, 14. Comment: Lynne Bretonn gave an uneven performance that lacked any sense of theatricality (Stage).

Comment: The play

was written originally for BBC television (then entitled And Some Have Greatness Thrust upon Them) which refused to produce it unless a line about a position for sexual intercourse was changed. Frisby refused to do so, hence the stage version. Guardian said the comedy was "genuinely funny ... unrepentantly vulgar," and a success. At the end of act one Illustrated London News was "practically prostrate with laughter. A stern man across the aisle, who had sat with pursed mouth through the first ten minutes, was now quivering like a gratified jelly." "Filled with hearty, deep-blue guffaws" (Observer). Variety praised the actors' ensemble performance. Stage commended the piece both as a comedy and as a serious play that showed "much of the ways of life today in large sections of our society." Daily Mirror joined in the chorus of approval, and commended the cast, particularly Peggy Mount.

69.293 The Pit (P) Naftali Yavin. ICA 23/10/69. Reviews: Stage 30/10/69, 13; Times 24/10/69, 13. Comment: TOC. Times said that it was troubled that this piece, indebted to "Chaikin, Brook, Grotowski, and the Living Theatre," came across as "a hymn to self-absorption." For Stage the piece was akin to watching a movie: "the whole effect is heightened considerably by having the acting team play inside a boxlike structure. Cut into this structure are small holes and we, voyeur like, watch them through these."

Comment: Eric Porter portrayed the reminiscences of the Danish author, Carl Wald, although Tribune thought the dramatization was unnecessary. "Cosy and predictable" (Daily Mirror). Guardian said the piece was not big enough for the stage and was better suited to television. Times declared the piece was "often woefully naive," but that Porter gave a technically "superb performance."

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Guardian disliked the attempt the update the play with modern dress and props. Tribune was also unhappy with the production which tended to be composed of "isolated bright ideas which bear no organic relationship to one another." Observer had mixed feelings about Terry Hands's direction, but praised the huge cast "of generally even distinction." Hands's "anxiously considered treatment of a vast, sprawling comedy very seldom glows into life. Possibly it is because the occasion has so little sense of gaiety" (Illustrated London News). Spectator thought much of the play was dated and too episodic and suggested a cut-down version might work better. "Despite the efforts of several cast members, the play comes out as a bore" (Variety). Times blamed Jonson's dramaturgy for largely eliminating conflict from the plot.

Comment: Guardian called it a "mild" entertainment with Gordon Clyde at the centre of it. "Slightly old-fashioned" (Tribune). "The sketches are astonishingly variable in quality, some being simple to the extent of pointlessness, others having a veneer of sophistication and one or two bearing the hallmark of having been performed at a seaside pavilion in one of the smaller resorts" (Stage). "An insipid song-and-sketch entertainment that would like to be a revue but never quite knows how to manage it" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Illustrated London News reported the Westminster had been “leased temporarily to an outside management.” Spectator said the play had not dated, with good performances from Flora Robson and Joyce Carey. Times discussed the production's different presentation of the character Miss Beringer, rendered here as “a shy, pathologically silly woman” instead of as “a strange, demented woman.”

Comment: Rex Harrison played a feckless painter leading a Bohemian life in Brighton. Harrison's performance should not be missed (Spectator). Observer thought Harrison's light comedy technique was “one of the marvels of the contemporary theatre.” Variety did not think much of the play but acknowledged its success depended upon Harrison. Similarly Times which said the role fit Harrison “like a well-made suit.” “The vast Harrison fan club will cluck appreciatively. But anyone expecting more than personal magnetism may be disappointed in a play which barely stretches to two hours, including two intervals” (Daily Mirror).

Reviews: Guardian 7/11/69, 13; Times 7/11/69, 13; Tribune 7/11/69, 10. Comment: A fifteen-minute piece, about a dog “bleeding to death in the street,” staged outdoors at the foot of Marble Arch. Times reported about 200 people watched, and also discussed the nature of street drama. Ambiance was in the process of moving to the Green Banana.

Plot: Bull/3,

Schrank, Vinson. Reviews: Stage 13/11/69, 9; Times 10/11/69, 11. Comment: English Stage Society. Produced without decor. A badly "under-rehearsed" performance of a play ill-suited to the "necessarily limiting physical conditions" of the production (Times). The play "never conveys any idea of what is meant to be happening ... The writing wasn't helped by ponderous production or the leaden footed performances" (Stage).

Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 13/11/69; apparently there were no previews. Guardian said Geraldine McEwan was miscast, but Edward Woodward was superb. Tribune admired the production for "not imposing an alien modern gloss" on the text. Piero Gherardi's designs were "striking, original, brazenly theatrical" but "spectacle has overwhelmed Webster's play" (Observer). Variety thought the production's biggest assets were the scenery and costume, but complained about the 180 minute running time. Times said in Frank Dunlop's production "there is no terror, no pity, and no brooding sense of mortality ... What we get is a flamboyant series of theatrical turns." The production remained in repertory until 23/1/71.

Comment: Guardian thought the play had good intentions in presenting a somewhat revisionist view of Jesus, but the biblical texts always intervened; Frank Finlay performed Jesus somewhat monotonously. Tribune agreed. Observer, however, said Finlay was "persuasive." Times reported this was the first play to present Christ on stage since the abolition of stage censorship.

"A theatrical bran tub ... with minimal regard for logic or internal consistency" (Times). "Billed as a musical loosely based on the early life of Irish composer Percy French, Phil The Fluter ... turns out to be an entertainment which should be called 'The Stanley Baxter Show.' The Scottish comic and impressionist is seen as a swinging nun, a plumber, a French maid, Oscar Wilde, and other characters too numerous to mention" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: A protracted evening of nostalgia, centering on Porter's various songs, that failed to take flight (Guardian). Variety noted the differences between this version of the piece and the earlier one by Guy Bolton and P. G. Wodehouse. Christian Science Monitor said this version was "paler" than the original which was also not hugely successful [see Wearing 35.221]. Times declared the piece was "a classic" but it had been rearranged here.

[the] production outclasses the Mermaid's Treasure Island in naval transformation" (Times). Stage said this documentary piece told "a fine story, is full of character and incident, has some action, but just doesn't move or inspire. Comment: Times opined this comedy, which included numerous atrocities, would have been really successful in Joe Orton’s hands. “I find few things more dispiriting on the contemporary stage than the fashion for black comedy, a brand of diversion that glories in its lack of taste, and thrives upon it. The work of Joe Orton sadly depressed me; lesser workers in the field can induce dangerous melancholia” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. The play is also attributed to Thomas Middleton. "One of the RSC's finest achievements of recent years," although it had been beset by financial difficulties when first produced at Stratford three years earlier (Observer). Spectator was equally laudatory and singled out the performances of Ian Richardson, Alan Howard, Helen Mirren, and Norman Rodway. Times praised the cast and added "Christopher Morley's designs give a marvellous picture of diseased luxury." "The RSC's often irritating penchant for perpetual twilight [lighting] here assists the action, as scenes emerge from the shadows and fade back into them" (Tribune). Christian Science Monitor felt the production was not as good as the National's The White Devil (69.310).

69.328 Viet Rock (P) Megan Terry (adpt Dusty Hughes). STUDIO THEATRE 27/11/69. 1st perfd La MaMa Experimental Theatre Club, New York, 21/5/66; 1st British perf. Cast: 11/12/69, 15. Comment: English Stage Company. A documentary style drama about prison life that also develops the characters of the eight men concerned (Guardian). Tribune thought Norman's play was too self-conscious and so the dialogue did not ring true; however, the performances possessed "the grit and gristle of the real thing." Observer noted it had taken eight years to get the play staged and it retained a 1950s flavor. Times detected an affection tone in Norman's view of prison life.

69.332 Towards Zero (P, 3a) Agatha Christie and Gerald Verner (adpt of Christie's Towards Zero, 1944). WIMBLEDON 1/12/69. Plot: Fletcher, Salem, Wagoner, 125, Weintraub. Thomas Royde Eric Corlett; Patricia Temple, Gene Sandys, Graham Squire, Vanessa Riches, Eugene Hamilton, Velvey Attwood, Patricia Brackenbury, Harry Parkinson, David Purcell.

Comment: Hugh Williams died, 7/12/69, shortly after opening night (Guardian 8/12/69, 11). Observer noted the thematic resemblance between this play and She's Done It Again!, and The Bandwagon. "The main theme is the civilising influence on a wayward girl of pregnancy" (Guardian). Spectator reported two audience reactions to lines in the play indicated there was a definite market for the play's message. Times found the piece bland, formulaic, and conventional; it needed something quite out of the ordinary injected into it.

69.334 Sham (P) Ronald House and Eric Loeb. NEW ARTS LAB 2/12/69.* Ron House, Eric Loeb, Lynda Dheley, Jonathan Hammond. Dir Jonathan Hammond. Review: Stage 18/12/69, 17. Comment: North End Troupe. The play was “concerned with a very real problem of the moment, the exploitation of would-be actors” (Stage).

69.335 You’re a Good Man, Charlie Brown (Mus ent, 2a) “John Gordon” [Clark Gesner] (bk; based on Charles M. Schulz’s comic strip, “Peanuts”) and Clark Gesner (mus, lyr). Comment: Both plays showed “the same macabre, luxuriant fantasy as in [The Ruling Class], the same manic, uncontrolled gift for a phrase”; with “two very funny” performances by Joe Melia (Observer). Tribune credited Melia’s performances for making the pieces viable. For Times both plays confirmed that Barnes was “one of the most original and biting comic writers working in Britain.”

69.344 Pit (P) Peter Dockey. THEATRE UPSTAIRS 12/12/69.* Cast: Findlater. Review: Stage 18/12/69, 17. Comment: English Stage Company. The piece "shows a variety of physical events taking place in a pit with the audience round the edge, but as with many of these mixed-media pieces, the invention, though often startling in its range, flags before the next idea comes along to revitalise it" (Stage).

Comment: A two-hander about feuding (and potential incest) between a brother and sister that made for heavy going; however, "Diane Cilento and Robert Hardy deal with the material with highly professional competence" (Guardian). Observer praised the acting, but not the play. "A thoroughly awful play" (Tribune). Times described it as "clumsy and attention-seeking" and the dialogue as "too private and repetitious for a public audience."

Comment: MPS 161. National Theatre. Press night was 18/12/69; apparently there were no previews. Guardian thought this presentation of the Don Quixote story from the point of view of the squire lacked vitality and was heavy going. New Statesman did not find the piece entertaining and tended to fall asleep during the performance. "The play's humour is primitive in the extreme" (Spectator). A "muddled attempt to translate a European classic into a pop entertainment" (Times). Illustrated London News described the production as a "pleasurable occasion." "Although the script is not particularly funny or imaginative, Kinnear wrings many laughs out of his part" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: MPS 170. The play, set in 1942, was about the relationship between a Desert Rat and a romantic German youth. "Well written, well acted and holds the interest to the end" (Daily Mirror). Guardian (18/12) said this heavy-handed play suffered from padding and a "sudden and facile" climax, but it did have something to say. "It's a good, professional, excellently acted three-hander" (Observer). Times found the play formulaic, familiar, and glib. "Generally, it appears to me to be the stuff of a novel as much as of a stage play; but Ronald Eyre has treated it so firmly, and Tony Selby, Dennis Waterman, and Neil Stacy act with so much direct command that we accept the stage form" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: MPS 155. Guardian disapproved of the adaptation (as did Times), but praised both the acting and the direction. Variety agreed, but conjectured the production was "prospectively viable." Observer said Dorothy Tutin did not appear to be comfortable in her role; the evening proved to be "oddly leaden." Tribune thought the piece might have been better as a farce.

Comment: MPS 283. Royal Shakespeare Company. Performed earlier at the Olympia, Dublin, 25/4/67. "Unrelieved allusiveness, actually alluding to nothing very much, for three hours plus, gets even an Aldwych audience coughing and shuffling in their seats" (Tribune). Variety reported the audience "had the look of a boxer at the final bell of a tough fight. They appeared uncomprehending and disturbed by the play's numerous levels of significance." Guardian agreed the play was not explicit but reported "it has a simply brilliant production by Robin Phillips." Observer noted various allusions in the play and concluded the production was "a distinguished, overdue occasion." Times said Albee was "less an innovator than a decorator of existing idioms. All the styles he uses can be traced to a root elsewhere." The

New York production ran for 167 performances.

70.11 Winterthing (P for children) Joan Aiken. JEANNETTA COCHRANE 17/1/70.* Comment: Young Vic/Puffin Players. About a family living on a remote Scottish island learning that the old legends might be true.

Comment: Victoria Theatre (Stoke-on-Trent) Company. The play was "about the early history of the primitive Methodists, and their leader, Hugh Bourne" (Christian Science Monitor). Spectator commended the honest acting and Peter Cheeseman's direction. Times admired the production "for the respect and wholeheartedness with which it treats everything it touches."

70.14 The Gondoliers; or, The King of Barataria (CO, 2a) W. S. Gilbert (lib) and Arthur Sullivan (mus). SADLER'S WELLS 19/1/70. Plot: Ayre, Fletcher, Gänzl, Hochman, Law, Salem, Shipley, Sobel. Comment: Roc Brynner was Yul Brynner's son. An impressive debut by Brynner (Observer). Brynner spoke "in a conversational monotone. [The play] is all grey and untheatrical and, frankly, rather trite" (Illustrated London News). "An uncommonly smooth piece of work" (Spectator). Times noted the different emphasis found in Cocteau's book. The first New York production (Edison 5/10/70) ran for 8 performances.

70.17 Richard II (T) William Shakespeare. PICCADILLY 20/1/70. Cast: WWT/15. The cast was the same as 69.271. Observer reported on the box-office fever to obtain tickets for Ian McKellen's Richard and Edward (70.25), and on seeing the making of a tele-recording of Edward II for the BBC which revealed McKellen could break and resume his portrayal "where he had left off as if turning on a tap." Guardian thought McKellen's interpretation of Richard failed to combine Richard's "self-dramatizing and ... actual pain."

Comment: MPS 142. "As dismal a collection of domestic platitudes interspersed with feeble jokes ... as is likely to come our way this year" (Spectator); Illustrated London News agreed, but commended the performance of Prunella Scales. Tribune said "the real human problems and the jokier patter somehow never touched each other." However, Variety called it "a tight, well-charactered and perceptive domestic comedy" and deserved a healthy run. "An exemplary specimen of candour, fair-mindedness, and intelligent fun" (Times).

Comment: "Being ethnic entertainment, its audience may be limited, but it's a pleasant, undemanding evening" (Variety). Guardian reported Larry Adler provided "some schmalzy pseudo folk tunes for some homely lyrics." For Times the piece worked well because of its roots in folk theatre; with Joe Melia and David Kossoff well cast. "The nudging, winking type of humour comes across very well and there is a first-class portrayal by Stella Moray of a Jewish mother" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: English Stage Company. The third part of Howarth's trilogy which included All Good Children and A Lily in Little India. The play's "real-life context is too elliptic, too allusively dependent on a knowledge of what has gone before" (Tribune). Observer thought the acting was the best part of the production, but was somewhat unhappy with Howarth's use of "time-chopping and free association." The latter technique also exasperated Illustrated London News which preferred Howarth's direct method in the two other plays. Variety (18/2) called it a "delightful new play," and singled out Diana Dors's "brilliant return" to the stage. Daily Mirror also commended Dors's "very clever performance."

70.29 The Big Romance (P) Robert Thornton. COURT 1/2/70, 8/2/70.* 2 perf. Reviews: Stage 5/2/70, 20; Times 2/2/70, 11. Comment: MPS 263. English Stage Company. Produced without decor. The play involved the reunion, after thirty years, of a man with his mother who had abandoned him at birth. Times described it as "truthful and excellently written," and it deserved to be not overlooked. Hilary Mason "achieved an angular intensity that was most impressive" (Stage).

Comment: Guardian said the play was too long, not always witty enough, "tough-going," with a good performance from Patrick Magee as "a sort of Captain Shotover." Illustrated London News welcomed "Gielgud's glorious voice," Magee was "lost too often in a foam and froth of over-speaking." "The scene that Mr. Shaffer sets up is quite exciting; what takes place in it is blush-makingly pretentious and dull" (Christian Science Monitor). Variety said the play was expertly staged, "occasionally profound," but inherently incredible. Times said the piece failed to deal with the theme it set itself, as well as being reminiscent of a much better play, Robert Bolt's The Tiger and the Horse.

Comment: Nottingham Playhouse Company. While keeping the Jacobean setting, the production managed to render the play modern, louche, and lewd (Guardian). The production justified the Nottingham Playhouse's reputation as a leading provincial theatre (Observer). "A neat, witty and singularly well orchestrated production" (Spectator). Times commended Stuart Burge for seeing the play was "far less sententious" than most of Jonson's comedies; however, aspects of the production and performances were at odds with "Jonson's own effects." "A lot of the dialogue is taken too fast to be fully understood, but this criticism can't be levelled at Frank Middlemass, the lecherous old knight, purple with passion. A very funny performance" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: Nottingham Playhouse Company. Guardian thought Jonathan Miller's production was "sensational in its plainness," but said Michael Hordern's Lear lacked "massive passion." Agreeing, Illustrated London News said Hordern's "Lear—consistently composed, clinically exact on its small scale—has never been a man of power, pre-eminence, and all the large effects that troop with majesty." Times said Hordern's performance "totally excludes pathos and high passion." Spectator, in a detailed analysis, praised the production, Hordern's "astonishing performance," and Frank Middlemass's "brilliant performance" as the Fool.

Comment: Times found the play "hollow" because since "the tower can stand for almost anything it comes in the end to mean almost nothing." "The symbolism of man trapped in the circus ring of life has as many interpretations as there are spectators to watch it" (Stage).

70.41 The Mayor of Zalamea (P) Pedro Calderón de la Barca (anon trans/adpt of El alcalde de Zalamea, 1636). CURTAIN 12/2/70. Plot: Gassner, Griffiths, Hochman, Comment: “A most ingenious new thriller” with excellent performances by Anthony Quayle and Keith Baxter (Guardian). Variety predicted “it could turn out a sleeper and ... it will be popular in repertory.” “Passes the test of all good thrillers in that it binds the reviewer hand and foot” (Times). The first New York production (Music Box 12/11/70) ran for 1,222 performances; Quayle and Baxter repeated their performances for the New York opening.

Comment: “Earnest to a fault and often quaintly naive, the play deals with the story of a strike on a tunnel construction job in France nearly twenty years ago” (Daily Mirror). “Any play in which any anguished girl turns on an innocent/impotent guy to rage ‘What do you know about love?’ does not deserve to survive very long” (Guardian). Observer, however, discerned merit in this play “about the Catholic worker-priest movement” and in Alan Dobie’s “fine, gritty performance.” Times said Stewart had failed to develop what was “an instantly sympathetic subject.”

Comment: “Probably the first stage production based on unisex. On the basis of this, it had better be the last” (Variety). Illustrated London News could find merit only in the dialogue, but opined it might have been received better as a fringe offering. “An odd, morbidly interesting evening” about a son bringing home a “girlfriend” who could be either male or female (Tribune). Christian Science Monitor observed the play occurred during “one of the most spectacularly unsuccessful weeks in recent history.” “A unisex comedy; a novel and most theatrical theme grievously mangled” (Times).

Observer 1/3/70, 32; Stage 26/2/70, 14; Times 20/2/70, 8. Comment: MPS 234. A musical about Marie Lloyd. Times thought the multiplicity of contributors resulted in a lackluster piece: "No clear picture of Marie Lloyd emerges, no sense of a period, no smell of greasepaint, no roar of the crowd." "A cheery, lively, up-to-date show with no nostalgic nonsense and it is put over with gaiety and verve ... Barbara Windsor brings vivacity, vitality, prettiness and good will to the part of Marie" (Stage).

Comment: Apparently the original title was Picture You upon My Knee (Variety 5/11/69, 64). The play was about an elderly novelist who returns home with a young mistress. Guardian described it as "what used to be thought of as a typical West End London comedy. The audience liked it greatly." "Nigel Patrick breezes through the part of the loveable rogue, Siobhan McKenna exudes goodness as the wife. The American dialogue is fun, the setting attractive and the acting excellent" (Daily Mirror). "A glossy, wise-cracking, trivial comedy" (Variety). A tired play about a tiresome author (Tribune). Times observed the play formed part of a week of "West End horrors."

Comment: MPS 260 (for this version). English Stage Company. Paul Scofield gave a virtuoso performance (Observer). Guardian praised Anthony Page’s direction (his best to date) and Scofield for “almost unbearingly moving” scenes. “Standout performances and several supporting portrayals bolster Anthony Page’s fine, moving staging” (Variety). Times noted Hampton’s adaptation “strips the literary flourishes down to the bone so that the people seem blunter, sexier, more direct and more desperate than they have in the past.”

Comment: MPS 285. Royal Shakespeare Company. Variety said it was “not a play to be loved, but is to be admired and never ignored.” Guardian found the play “long and uneconomical,” but noted the audience laughed “joyously” at some of the jokes. Spectator complained about the play’s “inordinate and quite uncalled-for length,” and suggested that, if cut by half and “with Haggerty excised, it would be remarkably snappy, and an unusually truthful, piece of work.” Times praised fine performances from Frank Finlay and Leslie Sands, “but the whole statement of the play strikes me as muzzily narcissistic.”

70.65 All My Sons (P, 3a) Arthur Miller. TOWER, CANONBURY, 27/2/70. Cast:TTC. Plot: Best/46, 29, Bordman, Bordman/4, 264, Bronner, Bryer, Fletcher, Hirschak, Hochman, Law, Loney, 252, MacNicholas, Matlaw, Salem, Shank, Wilmeth.

The play involved people in an asylum reenacting the bombing of Hiroshima. Stage faulted the play’s weak dialogue: “So much of the play is talk, too much of it in the form of soliloquies, and so much of the talk is fatally peppered with lines like ‘Time is precious, let’s get a move on.’”

70.69 New Victoria Line (Revue) Tony Jason (mus, lyr) and Victor Hale (mus, lyr). OPEN SPACE 4/3/70 (Lt).* Cast: Stage 12/3/70, 15; WWT/15. Comment: Guardian felt this kind of “talk-feast” theatre was passé. “More recent, sharper satires on the monarchy and democracy have made this play appear old-fashioned” (Daily Mirror). However, Observer called it “a brilliantly topical comedy”; Christian Science Monitor agreed but conceded it was still one of Shaw’s minor plays.” A “winningly benevolent performance from John Neville,” but it was a mistake to cast a black actress as Orinthia because it

“introduces an alien racial motif that formed no part of Shaw’s prophesy” (Times).

Comment: Times said it was painful to see McCullers fumbling her way trying to write a play for Broadway, and the “leaden” production did not help. “A predictable, pretentious popular magazine effort with a banal triangle situation” (Stage); Illustrated London News concurred. The first New York production (National 30/10/57) ran for 45 performances.

70.77 Antigone (T) Sophocles. COCKPIT 10/3/70. Plot: Fletcher, French/2, Gassner, Hochman, Law, Patterson, Salem, Shipley.

Plot: Hochman, Vinson, Walford, Weintraub. Reviews: Guardian 11/3/70, 8; Observer 15/3/70, 35; Times 11/3/70, 14. Comment: English Stage Company. “A fragmented spasmodic work abounding in fanciful images of Christie’s life” that do not add up to a complete play (Guardian). Observer, which favoured the play, reported it was staged in the round “in a pit knee-deep in trampled newsprint.”

70.78b A Who’s Who of Flapland (P) David Halliwell. THEATRE UPSTAIRS 10/3/70. Cast: Findlater; Stage 12/3/70, 17. Colin Gordon, Clive Revill. Dir Michael Wearing. Review: Times 11/3/70, 14. Plot: Vinson. Comment: English Stage Company. Since both plays created “comedy from atrocious crime” they formed “a lively and well-justified” double bill (Times).

70.79 The Underground Lovers (C, 2sc) Jean Tardieu (trans [Colin Duckworth] of Les amants du métro, 1952). SOHO 10/3/70. Plot: Hochman, Matlaw, 747, Patterson. Comment: Pip Simmons Theatre Group.

Moore, Gareth Jones; St dir Betty Richie. Plot: French/2, Schrank, Vinson. Reviews: Stage 9/4/70, 13; Times 1/4/70, 11. Comment: English Stage Company. Performed under the collective title of Beckett 3. Times noted "the stage [was] almost permanently shrouded in darkness, physical movement [was] rationed to the barest minimum." Cascando was played "in total darkness" and left Times "completely baffled." "Beckett's lack of concern with words bothers me, his negation of ideas doesn't seem to belong in the theatre, and, most of all, I find his work crashingly boring" (Stage).

Comment: "The story does not really generate enough tension to put it in the top class of comedy thrillers. Too often the twists are funnier than the jokes" (Daily Mirror). Guardian did not find the piece as scary as it should have been and the cardboard characters were barely acceptable. "Deeply implausible ... [but] deft, fast, spookish, even witty at times" (Spectator). Variety opined it was sufficient for the West End and the acting was competent. "Rings a few changes on the basic country house formula" whodunnit (Times).

Bill Owen's portrayal is a little gem" (Variety). Christian Science Monitor was happy to report that "house full" boards were out every night for this play that possessed "a note of the most moving, delicate, and fragile sadness." Times found the revival more convincing and Storey's thematic point was clear.

70.107 Slag (C, 2a) David Hare. HAMPSTEAD 6/4/70.* Rosemary McHale, Marty Cruickshank, Diane Fletcher. Dir Roger Hendricks Simon; Sets John Hallé. Comment: MPS 261. Guardian said the play merited a West End production but needed revision. Tribune thought the play possessed "odd flashes of insight into the feminine psychology" that showed Hare was more than "just another sophisticated sex-comedian." Times said the characterizations in the play outweighed its implausibilities and ambiguities. The first New York production

(Public Theater/Other Stage 21/2/71) ran for 32 performances.

Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 8/4/70; apparently there were no previews. Maggie Smith gave an "immensely stylish high comedy" performance (Guardian); Illustrated London News called her "a natural Restoration actress." Observer was similarly full of praise for Smith. Like other reviewers, Spectator said "William Gaskill's The Beaux' Stratagem makes a brilliant companion to his production of ... The Recruiting Officer." "Gaskill has staged it intelligently, letting the script and the art of his first-class players have full rein" (Variety). Times welcomed the "direction and design partnership of William Gaskill and René Allio" for stripping away "the encrustations of Restoration tradition." The production remained in repertory until 2/1/71.

(8/4) commended the production to a degree, but thought the piece needed better construction, while Trevor Peacock playing the lead was rather dogged, if sincere. "As a musical, the narrative reaches the theatre with an exhilarating directness and simplicity. We must congratulate Trevor Peacock who, after writing libretto and lyrics and composing the music, now finds a most agreeable bounce and confidence as Erb himself" (Illustrated London News). Times was baffled by the piece's aim since the labour relations story line failed to jell and it was really just a "music hall musical." Stage judged the work favorably.

70.111a Not Now, Sweet Desdemona (P) Murray M. Carlin. Comment: English Arts Theatre Committee. On the financing of this production, see Times 14/3/70, 6. "Carlin is plainly intrigued by the ambiguities of the colour question, as both the plays deal with this matter and both come to the same conclusion, one on a broadly political plane, the other on a social-marital level. That conclusion is, as one might expect, inconclusive, being simply that when two people need each other colour and race are immaterial" (Stage).

Comment: "A play of human emotions set in occupied Norway, 1943" (adv. Stage 9/4/70, 15). While Stage found the story "effective," the production felt "wooden and artificial."

"In comparison with Stoppard, Joe Orton was a more significant and wittier writer, but in this limited territory Stoppard is a writer of superb irrelevance" (Guardian). The playlet "sustains itself well enough for 40 minutes" (Tribune). Times praised Geoffrey Reeve's production and most of the performances. The first New York production (Theatre Four 23/4/72) ran for 465 performances.

Comment: MPS 173. Guardian said the show was "scandalously, monstrously funny ... yet good-hearted." "Highly respectable family parties appeared to be enjoying it enormously ... And aficionados of dirty jokes will have a ball" (Tribune). Variety noted how La Rue had gradually risen to eminence and was now "a personality which exudes star quality, something bigger than life"; the show, however, was "grab-bag slapped together." La Rue "looks all female, but he never lets the customers forget that deep down he is male, all male. He makes Raquel Welch seem quite ordinary. But just when you are hooked on thinking he's the ultimate in femininity he croaks 'Wotcher, mate' like a docker with smoker's throat" (Daily Mirror).

It came as a refreshing, witty and lively change from the sameness of Danny La Rue and the slightly tasteless cavortings in Birds of a Feather."

Comment: Cinohermi Klub of Prague. World Theatre Season. Spectator called the Prague company "small, intimate and fiendishly accomplished ... [they] use their physical agility for dry comments on its mortal clumsiness." However, Christian Science Monitor was disappointed: "It seems to devote itself to rather crude horseplay ... emphasiz[ing] the more disgusting aspects of physical existence." Illustrated London News thought they lacked faith in the play, "but the business they have added is usually irrelevant and never very funny. That is unfortunate; they are discerning actors." Times said the company "deserves close study as a model ensemble."

Comment: Nottingham Playhouse Company. Guardian welcomed the production as "a splendid evening of old-fashioned drama of debate ... one of the best Shaw revivals for a long time." The revival reminded Tribune of John Arden's The Waters of Babylon. A "brisk, clean and shapely production" (Spectator). Times admired the play's "unusual combination of moral fervour with Sardou-like technical skill."

Comment: MPS 84. Times noted the piece used Machiavelli's comedy as an excuse for "combining the medieval giggles of old-style intimate review ... with the post-censorship bawdery of The Canterbury Tales." This could have been "an enjoyable ribald musical" but in fact was "more a bore than a bawd" (Variety). "All in all, a very strange entertainment" (Daily Mirror). Guardian cited two examples of the lack of wit in the piece.

Comment: Carol Channing's London debut. "Miss Channing is so much more inspired and original than most of her material" (Guardian); Times concurred. Illustrated London News reported Channing took "call upon call from a house in storming enthusiasm ... When an artist can rule such a house as Drury Lane, we know this is the stage hypnotism we want and seldom get."

"It is a piece that exactly fits the style of the company, and it is no exaggeration to call the result a classic production" (Times). Guardian said the production was "revelatory ... scorns farcical effects for something lighter and more profound." Spectator noted the production's "delicacy, rich detail, the humour wildly burgeoning in its undergrowth." Tribune was unenthusiastic because drunkenness was over-emphasized and "the cast was far too insistently bouncy."

Comment: Schiller Theatre. World Theatre Season. 1st British performance of the play was BBC National Radio 21/2/33. The Schiller company paled in comparison with the Cinoherni Klub of Prague (Guardian); however,

Tribune averred the Schiller company “showed considerably more stylistic range.” Times thought the production was too relaxed. “The large company, directed by Bolslaw Barlog, play at a leisurely pace, but create a wonderfully alive and colourful atmosphere, and in often showing us types rather than individuals, have an effect of unfolding a series of cartoons” (Stage).

9; Tribune 8/5/70, 11. Comment: National Theatre. Jonathan Miller set in the play in the business world of London in the 1890s; Laurence Olivier’s first performance of Shylock. Times was much interested by Miller using the theme of money to link the separate aspects of the play, even though the result was not entirely Shakespeare’s intent; Olivier’s Shylock was a complete departure from stage tradition and was a piece of great acting. Christian Science Monitor said Olivier’s Shylock was the most notable and successful aspect of the production, but other aspects were “less happy.” Guardian thought Shylock “is not a role which stretches [Olivier], or for which he will be particularly remembered.” Observer declared Miller’s vision was a virtual rewrite by making “the gruesome old bargain ... the heart of the play”; further, while Olivier’s performance was memorable, it was part of the ensemble. “A valiant muddle of a production, and much of the muddle is in the play to begin with” (Tribune). The production remained in repertory until 29/7/71.

Comment: Schiller Theatre. World Theatre Season. "A fine, faithful production, struggling bravely into a style that a modern audience finds hard to assimilate" (Tribune). Both Guardian and Times thought the production failed to provide an acceptable style or idiom. Christian Science Monitor reported the Schiller visit had sold out before the season began; however, many playgoers left this production at the interval.

Comment: Comédie-Française. World Theatre Season. The production was memorable for the performance of Robert Hirsch as Sosie (Observer). Parts of Hirsch's performance reminded Guardian of Frankie Howerd. Times said his performance was the centre piece of the production: "a performance of non-stop energy, played ... on a level of extreme feelings ... very little of which makes much impact on the receiving end."

Comment: New Statesman reported "the first night was an uproarious affair" but "the laughter on the second night was intermittent and unsure." Guardian thought the piece wavered between "Iris Murdoch's impious and sinister whimsy" and "undergraduate revue sketches." Observer noted a similar dichotomy. Variety doubted whether the play would run because of Mercer's "shock tactics of four-letter words." Michael Hordern's "magnificent" performance managed to camouflage the play's implausibilities (Times). “Hordern’s unsparing portrait of an elderly, anarchic vicar is the only reason for recalling Flint” (Illustrated London News).

It’s brisk and entertaining, but not much more” (New Statesman). Variety described the play as “talky and old-fashioned. The author is not one to sacrifice integrity of characters for the sake of easy modern kicks.” Guardian (8/5) praised performances by John Woodvine, Roger Hammond, Colin Farrell, and Ian Pigot. Times described Fairchild’s viewpoint as “impersonal” and the characters as resembling Victorian stereo-types.

Comment: Observer compared the play and plot to a “slam-bang Victorian melodrama,” the homosexual element excluded. Stage thought Hopkins needed to be clearer about what he wanted to say. Tribune thought Kevin Billington had made “a valiant attempt” to tone down the melodramatics, and averred, the sexual element aside, the play could have been staged anywhere in the West End. Times described the piece as “a linked series of characteristic situations” and said Hopkins was “an exact observer of behaviour under stress.” The first New York production (Brooks Atkinson 2/1/74) ran for 135 performances.

Comment: English Stage Company. Times found the piece beyond its experience and largely incomprehensible, commended the performances of Ian Hogg and Pat Hartley, but thought some of the cast “were flanneling.” Stage could understand only parts of this “arresting, fascinating, scarifying piece of work.” The American premiere was given at Chelsea Theater Center, Brooklyn, 23/2/71.

Comment: Catania Stabile Theatre (Sicilly). World Theatre Season. Guardian said it was an acceptable production of this atypical Pirandello work. Times thought the company's policy and acting style was “a Sicilian equivalent of the Dublin Abbey.” “Played with tremendous verve by a company which works in the closest harmony ... one of the most accomplished and interesting Daubeny has presented” (Stage). A “Sicilian domestic comedy, performed with a volcanic enthusiasm that all but incinerated the theatre” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Guardian said the play was inadequate for its theme, but there was good acting from Keith Michell and Diana Rigg. Variety agreed: the play was a “slow-paced, sometimes tedious, somewhat pretentious verbal piece which rarely attains the stature of its subject.” “A ragbag of [dated] styles” (Tribune). Times wondered why Millar had been attracted to the story in the first place. The first New York production (Brooks Atkinson 10/3/71), in which Michell and Rigg performed, ran for 53 performances.

Comment: Moscow Art Theatre. World Theatre Season. Guardian noted "the Moscow manner [of acting Chekhov] seems broad and at first almost damagingly over-emphatic" when compared to English productions. Spectator detailed ways in which the Moscow style was gradually evolving, a point taken up by Christian Science Monitor. Times found the production generally unsatisfactory, especially when compared with earlier London performances by the company. For Illustrated London News the individual performances did not "fuse into a major Chekhov revival, and we are perturbed by the director's restlessness."

Comment: Noteworthy for its professionalism: "looks good, sounds good and probably does you good. Barbara Windsor [gives] a commendable impersonation of Barbara Windsor" [sic] (Observer). "A good-hearted company, but an understated story-line" (Tribune). Christian Science Monitor said Windsor lacked the power to carry the show. "It's peppy, exuberant and likely to catch on with a faithful audience in search of nostalgia" (Variety). The piece lacked a strong book to combine all the other elements of the musical together (Times).

Comment: MPS 178. Variety reported the production marked the return of Raymond Massey to the West End after a very long absence, and his "authority in an unsympathetic role is admirable." "Good, solid, mid-fifties American domestic drama, if you like that sort of thing" (Tribune). New Statesman found it "hard to care about [the characters'] emotional colly-wobbles." Times noted the prevalence in American family drama of "the ghastly old father and the guilt-ridden son"; here the theme is made "more credible" by Massey's performance. The first New York production (Longacre 25/1/68) ran for 124 performances.

Comment: New Shakespeare Company. Times pointed out the disadvantages of open air performances of a play which attempted to convey a magical atmosphere. "An ideal production for school-outings, tourists and old ladies, otherwise it is lacking. The style of acting, in far too many cases, is incredibly declamatory, the direction boorishly static" (Stage).

Comment: The play was about a man who murders his wife and attempts to seek religious salvation. Stage detected an affinity with Orton's work. Ross "has a certain frenzied wit; a pity that he over-writes. As it is, he must be glad of the work of Brian Smith, John Carlin, and Brian Oulton" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Revived in 1974 as Let’s Get Laid (74.323). “If this witless, shoddy, vulgar farce clicks, it would be a sorry comment on West End popular standards ... The entire cast is forced to behave like moronic sex maniacs. Nude girls, the now-fashionable frontally-nude male and blatant homosexual—all ill-motivated and depressing” (Variety). “Full frontal nudity at times. It is the bosoms-and-buttocks show, with a welter of terrible jokes and corny double-meaning for those who want a quiet snigger with their erotica” (Daily Mirror).

Comment: Guardian was unpersuaded by Jonathan Miller’s attempt to turn the play “into a parable about colonialism,” and found other aspects of the production disappointing, while Christian Science Monitor embraced Miller’s concept. Illustrated London News was pleased Miller did not overemphasize his directorial approach. Spectator lauded Miller’s “truly formidable achievement,” here and two other recent productions, in stripping away “banalities, misconceptions, received ideas, like layers of old varnish, to restore a pristine clarity to Shakespeare.” Times shared the same perspective.

Comment: The play was about a stage sweeper who, using his imagination, conjures up more and more animals, people, and attendant horrible events. Stage praised Campton's "conceptual originality and apt wit."

Comment: Variety said the audience's response was "reassuring," and the "show is splendidly acted and sung, tightly directed, and clicks in every respect." "Intelligently scripted, witty, warm-hearted and blazing with the conviction of its theme, 1776 is a hugely enjoyable experience. Outstanding in the main role is Lewis Fiander" (Daily Mirror). Christian Science Monitor reported the piece was "a triumphant success," and noted there were many Americans in the first-night audience. "A failed thriller, posing as a musical" (New Statesman). The show lacked memorable songs (Times). The first New York production (46th Street 16/3/69) ran for 1,217 performances.

Comment: MPS 264. English Stage Company. A "rare and beautifully done" play with perfect performances from John Gielgud and Ralph Richardson (Guardian). "The play is extraordinary in its sympathy and curious rhythm. Its dramatist is not using shock tactics; nothing is cheap or melodramatic" (Illustrated London News). Variety called the play "a brilliant new effort ... [from] the most interesting young British dramatist of the day ... a superb cast," a view enlarged on by Christian Science Monitor. While Spectator (27/6) praised Gielgud's and Richardson's "superb performances," it called the piece "a sadly tedious tale set in a mental home (where else?) which meticulously imitates Beckett's hackneyed surface." Times praised "Storey's flawless sense of tone ... The weak link in the play is its excessive economy of dialogue." See also Lloyd Evans, 170–72. The first New York production (Morosco 15/11/70) ran for 110 performances, with the same cast (Gielgud, Nichols, Richardson, Washbourne).

Comment: MPS 166. This factual play was about the Countess of Warwick and her love letters from Edward VIII. "A good juicy scandal? Most certainly. But the dramatic version ... is not nearly the exciting event it promised to be. For some strange reason, it is played as a comedy. It fails on that score because it is not nearly funny enough." (Daily Mirror). Guardian thought the play might appeal to those with old-fashioned tastes. Observer said the piece attempted to turn its material into a Henry James plot but did not succeed. Times agreed that the material involved was "stubbornly undramatic." "Fails to express either history or drama" (Variety). "The business seems centuries away, vague through the wrong end of a telescope" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 29/6/70; apparently there were no previews. Ingmar Bergman has "taken a play about a woman driven to morbid excesses by a mediocre, enervating society and turned it into a case study of a hysterical wife" (New Statesman). Variety noted this was a restaging of Bergman's 1968 World Theatre production but with a British cast. Guardian said Maggie Smith's Hedda was "gripping, though not moving." "An utterly bored, utterly sadistic Hedda" (Tribune). "Essentially, what Bergman does ... is to make the play's sub-text visible" (Times). The production remained in repertory until 19/12/70.

Comment: MPS 256. Royal Shakespeare Company. "A wonderfully successful and amusing adaptation and production" (Guardian). Donald Sinden gave "an exquisitely judged performance" (New Statesman). Harcourt "is the kind of full scale period creation we have lacked since Mr Sinden's Lord Foppington" (Illustrated London News). Sinden's "plummy voice, his foppish mannerisms and his masterly double-takes are devastatingly funny" (Daily Mirror). The play confirmed "Boucicault's reputation as a master entertainer" (Times). Comment: The re-opening of the Vaudeville after renovation (Variety 29/4/70, 225). Margaret Lockwood was "delightful" in the lead (Guardian). Observer objected to "the essential nastiness of the plot which hinges on dislike of Jews, tradespeople and female flesh." Variety opined this was the wrong period piece to stage since Maugham later wrote better plays "and the witticisms fail to save a trivial and snobbish story." Times said the production did not offer a "modern perspective into the comedy," being firmly fixed in "the tastes and value of 1908." Christian Science

Monitor reported the first-night audience enjoyed the production "enormously."

The play was about a coal-shoveller who has to keep working harder and harder just to maintain his standard of living. New Statesman called it a political allegory that could be "less plonkingly explicit; but it has wit and spirit." Guardian had reservations about the play but still found it "both tender and touching." Times could not decide whether the piece was “a generalized parable or a highly personal melodrama.”

Comment: See New York Times 14/5/44, 44 for details of two early performances of the piece including what is referred to as the premiere at the National, Washington, D.C., 13/5/44. Stage said of this rather old-fashioned piece “the general impression is a very pleasant one because the characters are well- drawn, strongly three-dimensional and thoroughly believable. What is less credible is the extreme suddenness of the instant conversion of numbers of very diverse people on hearing of the principals of moral rearmament.”

Comment: On Strauss's life. "The audience gulped it all, with an unquenchable thirst for the treacle and the endless three-four" (Guardian). "Camp self-parody is the chief pleasure of the vast, preposterous operetta" (Observer). Times declared the show was for people who like to take a bath in whipped cream. "No musical could be more sugar-coated or oozing with goo than The Great Waltz ... Careful weight-watchers should be warned that just watching it is liable to put pounds on their waistline" (Daily Mirror).

70.227 Till Howleglass, Lord of Misrule. MERCURY 9/7/70. 1st London perf? Review: Stage 16/7/70, 20. Comment: Sidewalk Theatre Group. An improvised version of Eulenspiegel stories. "A very tightly put together piece; it uses minimal props and costumes, is controlled and works beautifully" (Stage).

Christopher Plummer's vocal characterisation of the arrogant, amorous Henry was admirably done and well matched by Dorothy Tutin's flirtatious Anne Boleyn" (Stage). Although the piece was essentially undramatic, Christopher Plummer's performance brought the thing to life (Times).

Comment: MPS 188. National Theatre. Press night was 15/7/70; apparently there were no previews. Observer described the piece as “a shapeless flux of lurid incidents loosely strung together.” Guardian panned the production but exempted “some touchingly sincere and heartfelt playing by Derek Jacobi.” However, Spectator found it “an absorbing evening” with faults. Variety deemed Gray's adaptation “a failure, though not without diverting aspects ... too episodic.” “An uncomfortable experience” but with an excellent performance from Jacobi (Tribune). Christian Science Monitor called the adaptation “a travesty of what its author intended ... wholly at variance with Dostoyevsky's purpose.” “I am sorry to see this piece of butchery on the stage of the National Theatre” (Times). The production remained in repertory until 3/4/71.

Comment: “The substance of the play, which is written in sometimes painful blank verse, lies in the struggle between [Giordano] Bruno and the Inquisition,” with an incompetent performance from Leonard Rossiter (Christian Science Monitor). Guardian thought the plot was clichéd, facile, and uncertain, but praised Rossiter’s “stunning” performance. Daily Mirror commended the play and Rossiter’s “towering performance.” Variety faulted the plot but commended Rossiter’s “virtuoso performance ... and a very good supporting cast.” Times described the piece as “period hokum” which employed “the homespun iambs of Hollywood Biblicals,” while Rossiter’s performance was “undisciplined and vulgar.” “Rossiter worries the part to death” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: MPS 255. Royal Shakespeare Company. Guardian commended the translation and the “exemplary firmness” of the production, but noted the play’s “lack of dramatic economy.” “The richest, most complex and sardonic play to come out of Germany in the past decade” (Observer). Tribune said the play possessed “theatrical force” but lacked a matching “intellectual vigour.” “The RSC performed less successful salvage work on another minor play” (Spectator).

Comment: MPS 183 (playscript for this prod). Noël Coward attended the opening. “A delightful” revival with a splendid cast (Guardian). Observer reported the production received a “predictably warm” audience response, but said the play needed pruning. “A thorough, accomplished revival, superbly cast—with Beryl Reid giving the role of Madame Arcati her own unique twists” (Tribune). “Comes up as fresh as crisp lettuce ... should find a ready market at the Globe for months” (Variety). “A cheering and reassuringly funny evening” (Times).

Comment: The production ran for 3,918 performances at the Royalty and Duchess. Guardian was underwhelmed by the supposed depravity and said the production had been over-hyped. Irish Times provided a synopsis of the cool reception by London critics. Variety mentioned the “hysterical advance chat and publicity,” and thought that, with a West End transfer and no police interference, the “revue could well prove profitable in pandering to the curiosity and voyeur instincts of the ‘permissive’ age.” Times found it an uneven show but concluded “it is not a menace” as some people believed. The New York

Comment: English Stage Company. Theatre Machine. The company improvised on suggestions from the audience and from suggestions gleaned from the evening newspaper. Times found the production “undeniably funny” but wanted the performers to “apply their technique to bigger issues.”

Comment: A solo recital by Siobhan McKenna of works by Irish writers. McKenna lacked “sparkle” on the second night when Tribune saw the production. “A brave, interesting and never boring experience,” but McKenna is a better performer when surrounded with a supporting cast (Variety). For Times the highlight of the production was McKenna’s performance of the Mollie Bloom solilo-quy from James Joyce's Ulysses.

Comment: Performed under the collective title The Two of Us. These four two-hander light playlets were performed by Lynn Redgrave and Richard Briers. “The combo works slickly but is hardly strong enough to carry” the production which “seems unlikely to weather commercial hazards” (Variety). Guardian reported the first-night audience was “markedly friendly” for this “jolly event.” Tribune remarked on Frayn’s “accuracy of the human observation.” “Nothing terribly wrong” with the sketches, “but you leave the theatre feeling that practically anyone could have written” them (Times).

Comment: Ambiance Theatre Club. “The most venomously dishonest product of the Black Arts movement yet to appear in London” (Times). Stage called Jones “an exciting writer, his words and ideas have a liberating effect on the mind, naggingly hinting at deeper motives under an exuberantly blasphemous surface of comic fantasy.”

Comment: Abbey Theatre Company (Dublin). After noting that some critics did not see the two plays because of the opening night of The Philanthropist (70.249), Irish Times provided a synopsis of critical responses. For

Spectator The Dandy Dolls was “an incomprehensible piece of fantasticated blarney.”

Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian placed Hampton above Wesker, Osborne, and Mercer as a dramatist, and praised Alec McCowen’s “true and superlative performance as the don.” Observer (9/8) remarked the “arbitrarily theatrical opening suicide and off-stage massacre of a British Cabinet” was a weakness in Hampton’s overall argument in the play. Variety noted McCowen’s difficult task of playing a dull, introverted character without becoming boring; “with deft underplaying McCowen pulls it off fascinatingly.” Times called the first scene “marvellous” but had difficulty relating it to the remainder of the play which it described as “a gently mocking comedy of academic manners.” The first New York production, in which McCowen and some of cast members repeated their performances (Ethel Barrymore 15/3/71), ran for 64 performances.

Times 6/8/70, 6; Tribune 21/8/70, 11; Variety 19/8/70, 58. Comment: MPS 93. An “ingeniously devised item which though ... straining credibility manages to extract enough laughs to tip this as a coach trade favorite for some time to come” (Variety). Guardian (6/8) disliked the play but thought it would run because of the attraction of Robert Morley. Tribune said it was the “best light comedy” currently in the West End, but was not as good as Relatively Speaking; the characters were less grounded, the plot “far too formulaic.” Ayckbourn’s “ingenuity is staggering but he puts little store by character and less by dialogue” (Spectator). Ayckbourn “stands or falls entirely by his manipulation of incident; and the fun he offers is akin to watching a house of cards continually in danger of collapse” (Times). The first New York production (Royale 29/3/71) ran for 104 performances.

Comment: Nottingham Playhouse Company. Times said the play’s verse did not clarify the main theme but was “more often decorative than practical.” “Fry has devised an exciting plot played out by strongly defined characters and his ability to spell-bind with wit, poetic imagery and sheer ability to use words better, in my opinion, than anyone since Shakespeare, makes this a play which needs to be seen” (Stage). “Here is that rarity, verse comedy written to be heard, by a dramatist in love with the English language and not its coarser outcroppings; a dramatist with a civilized mind, warm compassion, and a sense of character” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: London Theatre Group. Guardian said this version failed because it "owes its prime inspiration to contemporary influences as various as the Living Theatre and Charles Marowitz ... Berkoff himself plays Macbeth and plays him absurdly ... It is a relief to watch Mike Harley's dour Macduff and Glyn Grain's suspicious Banquo." Times objected to several aspects of the adaptation and production including the butchering of the verse.

Comment: Guardian (26/8) reported that a complaint against the play had been made to the police on the grounds of blasphemy. "It's the first play we've seen to take advantage of the end of stage censorship by depicting the Almighty in live anthropomorphic form ... Panizza went to jail for blasphemy when his play was first performed in Germany in the nineties" (Observer). Spectator said the play was "glumly handled" by its adapter, John Bird. Variety opined people would not be concerned about blasphemy, but said the piece was little more than a revue sketch; "it lacks real wit or theological profundity, and crude joshing is no substitute." Times acknowledged the revue material element, and concluded the piece made for "a good evening."

70.271 Lorna and Ted (C) John Hale. GREENWICH 1/9/70.* Cast: Stage 10/9/70, 13; WWT/15. Lorna Rita Tushingham; Ted Gissing Ray McAnally; Woman Veronica Clifford; Man Tony Matthews. Dir John Hale; Dec Roger Butlin; Cost dgn Richard Davin. Plot: Vinson. Reviews: Guardian 4/9/70, 10; New Statesman 11/9/70, 314; Spectator 12/9/70, 275; Stage 10/9/70, 13; Times 4/9/70, 11; Tribune 11/9/70, 15. Comment: MPS 235. The play was about the growing relationship between an ill-matched young spinster and a middle-aged bachelor. Guardian admired the complexity of Hale's characterizations. Tribune hinted the piece was pretentious. "Acceptably entertaining in its unpretentious way" (Spectator).

Reviews: Birmingham Post 8/9/70, 7; Christian Science Monitor 12/9/70, 10; Guardian 4/9/70, 10; Illustrated London News 19/9/70, 25; New Statesman 11/9/70, 314; Spectator 12/9/70, 275; Stage 10/9/70, 13; Times 4/9/70, 11; Tribune 11/9/70, 15; Variety 16/9/70, 88. Comment: Variety said the production was better than nothing and the cast was uneven; Angela Pleasence was a variable Joan, a view explored at some length by Spectator. Christian Science Monitor called it a "traditional production" in which Angela Pleasence came alive during the trial scene. Times declared the play possessed only one real scene (the trial), and was puzzled why "this play should command such a succession of revivals." Guardian had seen numerous revivals of the play and this revival "still holds me as it held last night's audience."

70.274 Bambi Ramm (P) Stephen Poliakoff. ABBEY COMMUNITY CENTRE 7/9/70.* Terry Huw Thomas. Review: Stage 17/9/70, 13. Comment: The play was about a teacher and some students endeavoring to understand each other, but failing. The play was "full of comedy and sinister atmosphere with sufficient uncertainty and psychological interest" that shows Poliakoff is "a worthy disciple of Pinter" (Stage).

70.275 Julius Caesar (T) William Shakespeare. COLLEGIATE 7/9/70. Review: Stage 10/9/70, 13. Comment: National Youth Theatre. Performed in modern dress.

70.276 The Wild Duck (D, 3a) Henrik Ibsen (adpt Max Faber of Vildanden, 1885). WIMBLEDON 7/9/70. Cast: Stage 19/11/70, 13. Plot: Bryan, Fletcher, French/2, Gassner, Hochman, Law, Matlaw, Patterson, Salem, Shank, Shipley, Sobel. Comment: Play Company of London. The pre-West End production prior to opening at the Criterion in November (70.348).

70.277 Albert's Bridge (P, 1a) Tom Stoppard. LAMB AND FLAG 8/9/70 (Ln). 1st perfd BBC Network Three 13/7/67; 1st stage perf St. Mary's Hall, Edinburgh, 29/8/69. Albert Michael Mundell; Paul Bacon, John Railton, Alan Rebbeck, Mary Ashton. Dir William Redmond. Plot: Hochman, Vinson, Walford, Weintraub. Review: Stage 17/9/70, 15. Comment: Apex Productions. Stage thought the play worked well on radio and gained nothing by being placed on stage.

70.278 Fuzz (P) Peter Terson. JEANNETTA COCHRANE 8/9/70. Faisal Edward Wilson; Laurence Kevin O'Shea; Duncan Woodcock, Kenneth MacDonald, Alan

Gill, Gareth Thomas. Dir Michael Croft, Barrie Rutter. Plot: Weintraub. Review: Stage 17/9/70, 14. Comment: National Youth Theatre. The weaknesses of the play were exposed by the "group acting which was insufficiently strong" in this revival (Stage).

70.279 No Trams to Lime Street (P with mus) Marty Wilde (mus, lyr) and Ronnie Scott (mus, lyr) and based on Alun Owen's television play (1959). Plot: Vinson, Weintraub. Reviews: Guardian 11/9/70, 8; Observer 13/9/70, 25; Stage 17/9/70, 13; Times 11/9/70, 14. Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian said the piece was "neat if overwritten," had an appropriate pop art set, and the female characters were performed superbly by Diane Hart, Susan Littler, and Cheryl Hall. "For an experimental evening it's well played" (Observer). The material was familiar but well-handled (Times).

70.282 The Demonstration (P) David Caute. UNITY 11/9/70. 1st perfd Playhouse, Nottingham, 19/11/69. Garfield Colin Semel; Steven Bright Ron Bevan; Peter Haveland, Chris Haveland. Dir Helena Kaut-Howson. Plot: Vinson. Reviews: Guardian 27/11/70, 10; Stage 17/9/70, 17. Comment: This three-hour long play, about student revolution, had "more intellectual interest than dramatic excitement because the author's insistence on detail, allied to a spirit of fair-mindedness, leads him up a number of avenues" (Stage).

70.283 The Cheats of Scapino [Scapino] (P) Frank Dunlop (adpt of Molière, Les fourberies de Scapin, 1671). Plot: Fletcher, French/2, Hochman, Salem. Reviews: Observer 20/9/70, 25; Stage 17/9/70, 13; Times 14/9/70, 5. Comment: The opening of a new theatre (see Guardian 13/8/70, 8). National Theatre production. Times said the production was well-suited to the Young Vic: "The lack of any barrier between audience and actors suits the use of a button-holing vaudeville style."

70.284a The Gentle Knight (C for children) Willis Hall. ARTS 12/9/70. Blindon Richard Jacques; Gon Matyelok Gibbs; Albert the Dragon Henry Manning. Dir Ursula Jones. Review: Stage 17/9/70, 17. Comment: Unicorn Theatre. A well-played revival (Stage).

Comment: MPS 259. English Stage Company. "The author is trying to say something of significance between the four-letter words and bouts of horseplay. Student demonstrations, the goddam war in Vietnam, the stupidity of the older generation and distrust of the police are some of the issues touched upon" (Daily Mirror). Variety deprecated the monotonous "flood of profanity," but acknowledged Weller had "an ear for dialog and ribald situations." Tribune entertained a favourable view of the play. "At its best ... a shrewd and hilarious caricature of America's student youth" but with "dismaying symptoms of a modish willingness to dress up [the] humour" (Spectator). Times felt ambivalent towards the play, but praised the direction by Roger Hendricks Simon and the performances of Seth Allen and Chuck Jones. The first New York production, as Moonchildren (Royale 21/2/72), ran for 16 performances.

Comment: Pip Simmons Company. The show's high-minded thematic aspirations were reduced to "an incoherent theatrical comic-strip" (Times). "'Contemporary mythology' is apparently the subject for exploration, but the actual delving remains superficial. Much of the show appears to be the result of improvisatory exercises that have jelled into permanent form" (Stage).

Comment: MPS 207. “These two trifles are both re-explorations of the standard Pinter situation” (Spectator). Guardian indicated that, like the emperor, Pinter lacked clothes so far as these plays were concerned. Observer said the plays really belonged on television whence they originated. Times also discussed the less than successful transition from television to stage but praised the plays themselves. The first New York production ran for 145 performances.

Comment: “Vain, gentle, gallant Nelson is a complex figure: Rattigan has to leave much to the actor, and Ian Holm—never in my experience better fitted—can suggest, with some Olivier intonations, the genius of the man, his freedom from taint of craven guile” (Illustrated London News). Guardian was disappointed with the play, historical dramas being difficult to pull off. Spectator called it a “fairly tame” drama that doesn’t fulfill prurient interest”; Zoe Caldwell's Emma Hamilton evoked memories of Hermione Gingold. Times observed the play was "yet another contribution to the West End's growing list of period plays: plays that celebrate the unchanging values of the middlebrow theatre-going public by taking a stand on history." Variety said the play was well-made, "consistently interesting," and acted by "stylish professionals."

70.294 Creatures of the Chase (P, 1a) Willard Manus. OPEN SPACE 24/9/70 (Lt). 1st London perf. Cast Stage 1/10/70, 15. Bobbie Byers, Stephen Barker. Dir Walter Donahue; Tech dir Michael Chapman-Pincher. Review: Stage 1/10/70, 15. Comment: The play was known later as Junk Food. The play was about an attempted seduction in car junkyard that ends in failure; it also revealed the materialistic nature of society.

Comment: Illustrated London News called Yeats's translation "grandly speakable" and said "this production would honour the National stage across the street." "Directed with imagination, boldness and depth of feeling by Roland Joffe," and good performances by Ronald Pickup, Annabel Leventon, and Gordon Jackson (Stage). Times did not find Ronald Pickup's Oedipus completely convincing, was unsatisfied with the handling of the Chorus, but concluded the production had "flair."

Comment: Portable Theatre. Stage described the piece as "political satire using four-letter basic English engulfed in lush tirades redolent of Jacobean drama, metaphysical conceit and Hogarthian squalor." Observer called it "a wildly caricatured Private Eye fantasia." "Shrill, hysterical and uncoordinated," Brenton's talent was "wildly misdirected" (Times).

Brown; Cond Michael Lankester. Reviews: Stage 1/10/70, 18; Times 29/9/70, 13. Comment: Based on a Russian folk tale, the piece was about a soldier who exchanges his fiddle for a magic book from the devil. Times said the production succeeded because Wendy Toye presented it "unashamedly as a stage piece."

70.301 The Persuader (P, 1a) Alan Partington. Comment: MPS 232. Stage described the set by Roger Butlin as “gaudy, pretentious, and empty. And so, for the most part, is the play itself.” Illustrated London News reported “one of the alarming things in the theatre is to see a play collapsing while you watch: an anxiously-poised card castle that wavers suddenly, topples, and spreads itself out on the floor while there is still half the evening to go.” Observer pointed to the “unspeakable lines” the cast had to struggle with. Guardian declared Murdoch had lost “control and command of her material,” and the play posed “large questions and timid answers.” Unconvincing, heavy dialogue, melodramatic, odd characters (Christian Science Monitor).

70.303 What Happened to Blake (P) David Hare. THEATRE UPSTAIRS 29/9/70.* Cast: Findlater; Stage 8/10/70, 13; WWT/15. William Blake Colin McCormack; Jane Austen Hilary Charlton; *T. S. Reviews: Observer 4/10/70, 28; Stage 8/10/70, 13; South China Morning Post 24/9/71, 12. Comment: Portable Theatre. “An artistic credo that includes male nudity fig-leaved in quotation and pseudo-quotation stemming from the life of William Blake” (Stage). “The style was very much that of a jocular strip-cartoon” (South China Morning Post).

70.304 In Camera (D, 1a) Jean-Paul Sartre [trans Stuart Gilbert of Huis clos, 1944]. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 30/9/70. Cast: Stage 24/9/70, 15. Comment: MPS 228. “Alastair Sim, as chairman of the Stewards, brings to the role his well-known repertoire of nudges, sly winks and chuckles. It is a very funny performance. He is well supported in the hilarious fiddling by Geoffrey Stunner and Robert Coote” (Daily Mirror), a view echoed by Variety. Stage thought the comedy was rather thin but the cast was able to transform it “into an evening of diverting light entertainment.” “Long laborious, talkative, repetitive, implausible” (Guardian). For Times the play was over-plotted. The first New York production (Cort 24/1/73) ran for 69 performances.

Comment: Freehold Company. “The programme states that this Duchess of Malfi is only based on the original, and certainly the antics of the company make a nonsense of any passages bearing a resemblance to the Webster's work" (Stage).

Comment: Theatre Workshop. "Joan Littlewood's well-known trademark of showbiz anarchy and cheerful vulgarity is clearly stamped on her latest production ... It is not for those who like a clearly defined plot or look for a bit of class in the acting or polish in the dialogue. Frankly, this satire on local government contains more rubbish than a council tip" (Daily Mirror). "One good joke and far too many of those lavatorial, excremental jests which are part of the post-censorship common market of our theatre" (Illustrated London News). Guardian did not know what was going on in the piece which was badly under-rehearsed. Spectator dubbed the piece "a quite abominable show," and used the occasion to launch an extensive attack on the "chorus of overpraise lavished upon the productions of Joan Littlewood in the late 'fifties" and afterwards. Times also panned the production.

Comment: MPS 201. The production ran over three hours. Illustrated London News reported the play had been revised since the Chichester production and it included a new opening. Variety praised this "literate, deftly constructed historical drama" and the "towering performances" of Eileen Atkins and Sarah Miles. Guardian declared it was the best historical play in London for a decade. The first New York production (Broadhurst 20/1/72) ran for 116 performances.

Mirror 14/10/70, 20; Illustrated London News 24/10/70, 33; Stage 22/10/70, 18. Comment: "The structure of the play, Parcival telling his story and stepping in and out of time, is confusing and poorly worked out, frequently the past incidents have details from the now section of the play, and the language shows an alarming paucity of depth of ideas" (Stage). "The dramatist's style varies between the flippant and the heavily intense ...Towards the end of the premiere a cast that had been acting with much loyalty began to gabble, and I could not really blame them" (Illustrated London News). "It is awful. I have sat through some dreadful plays in my time but this one tops them all for obscurity of plot and performance" (Daily Mirror).

Comment: A "tedious effort" with "a shaky future" (Variety). The piece lacked a strong focus of intent and failed "to get off the ground" (Times). "At the curtain I felt only that the night had been a void. Something ought to have startled us, and never did" (Illustrated London News). Stage saw some potential in the piece.

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. Tribune discussed the weaknesses and fallacies of the play and Shaw's ideas. Guardian lavished praise on the "capital" production and the play; Judi Dench was a worthy successor to Sybil Thorndike and Wendy Hiller. Spectator thought the Royal Shakespeare Company seemed to prefer to act other dramatists instead of Shakespeare. Observer commended the production for demonstrating that the last act "was the heart of the play." Times also discussed the play's weaknesses, and said Judi Dench's Barbara was no match for Brewster Mason's "simply overwhelming" Undershaft. The first New York performance was given at the Playhouse 9/12/15.

Comment: National Theatre. Observer noted Garland had “abridged Rostand’s five hours of alexandrines into three hours of colloquial English prose,” and yet the play seemed longer as a result; Guardian agreed. Times provided several examples of Garland’s unacceptable dialogue. Spectator also faulted the translation as well as the performances of Edward Woodward and Anna Carteret. Variety, however, enjoyed the production, found Garland’s version entertaining, and said Woodward was “in great fettle”; Daily Mirror agreed. The production remained in repertory until 1/4/71.

The piece was about the building of London’s elevated railway. Observer noted the music included “old railway and navy songs.” New Statesman praised the cast for “their energy and discipline,” and the documentary for its unsentimental attention to detail. Times thought the music-hall element distracted from the narrative.

"When Thou Art King is designed to show the developing education of a Prince in the responsibilities of kingship: from Falstaff's associate to the great days ahead. Mr Barton has had to be an agile mosaicist" (Illustrated London News). Times reported the show ran for five hours, had minimal staging, was performed by only fourteen performers, and kept a young audience "rapt and earnestly attentive." Stage commended the "swiftness and lucidity" of the production; "from the very first entrance, all is crystal clear, important when considering that the production will be much seen by schools, beautifully spoken, and totally lacking in false gimmicks." The piece attempted to present the history of the theatre solely through costumes draped on a model. Stage was unimpressed. Times recorded its amazement that the company chose "so hopeless an idea and presented it in a way that beggars description ... I have never known two hours go so slowly." Apparently the company also presented as separate programme, Alfredo Rodriguez Arias' Dracula and The Goddess (Stage 29/10/70, 17).

Comment: MPS 202. Eileen Heckart's London debut. "A great success with a delighted audience" (Christian Science Monitor). "A leaden comedy" (Tribune). "Enormously enjoyable" (Guardian). "A piece of pure marketing: packaged, instant self-congratulation for the wealthy middle-aged ... a ghastly thing" (Observer). Spectator said it was "sensitive." "A slight-weight comedy" that probably won't run because of "a somewhat sarcastic press reaction" (Variety). A "standard Broadway wisecracked-filled sex comedy" except that the boy is blind (Times). The first New York production (Booth 21/10/69) ran for 1,128 performances.

"A production that is both long and slow, curiously staccato and strangely passionless" (Stage). Alice was "acted by Dorothy Tutin with single-minded resolution: a superb performance" (Illustrated London News).

70.339 Gray of Gray's Elegy (One-man show) Michael

Burrell (deviser). JEANNETTA COCHRANE 5/11/70.* Review: Stage 12/11/70, 8. Comment: MPS 12137. Michael Burrell presented Thomas Gray “as the subject of a friendly illustrated lecture, a device which enables him to read letters in the character of the writers concerned and to use his versatility as an actor on Gray’s poems” (Stage).

Comment: Guardian still admired the play after more than two decades, with good performances from Kenneth More and Laurence Naismith. “Doubtless the Theatre of Chaos has its moments; but at the New we have a play in the traditional method by a man unashamed to master his technique and to use it” (Illustrated London News). Observer discussed Rattigan’s ambiguities in the piece, “hiding the play he wanted to write behind the one his audience would accept.” Variety acknowledged Rattigan’s craftsmanship and the perennial relevance of the theme. Christian Science Monitor reported that the first-night audience watched with “mixed feelings.”

Comment: The opening of the Hampstead theatre at a new site at Swiss Cottage. The piece was performed in modern dress and the cast was convincing; however, parts of Bowen’s message were not clear—he “condemns both the mechanistic state and the false god of drugs, but if he’s up to anything more, the focus is blurred” (Variety).

Times found several faults with Bowen's version, not least its decided topicality. Illustrated London News thought the first half worked, but not the second.

Comment: English Stage Company. "If it is four-letter words and simulated copulation you are after ... [this is your] destination" (Guardian). "What really happens in this turgid business only its dramatist, its actors, and its director know; one assumes that the author had a compulsive desire to get into his dialogue as much as possible of the language forbidden in a theatre before October 1968" (Illustrated London News). Comment: "Hysteria and screeching masquerading as statement only come across to me as bogus, worthy only of contempt. Theatre, such as this exercise ... is neither theatre nor is it persuasion or argument. It is just shrieking muddle, chaos, lambasting and mess, masquerading as youthful statement—here against public apathy and civil oppression" (Stage). Guardian commented that "really [Palach's] martyrdom not only happens off stage, it is never used as the play's basis or kernel."

Comment: The 1919 German premiere was a disastrous flop. Observer (15/11) praised Harold Pinter's brilliant direction and some of London's best acting—Timothy West, Vivien Merchant, and John Wood. "Some two and a half hours of the tightest, most controlled, low-key acting imaginable" (Guardian 13/11). Christian Science Monitor said Pinter was the ideal director for such an "obscure" play; "he does not try to explain anything. And that is as it should be"; Variety echoed the sentiment. The production revealed "an extraordinary affinity between Joyce and Pinter" (Times). The New York production ran for 41 performances.

Plot: Vinson. Reviews: Irish Times 18/11/70, 5; Stage 19/11/70, 15; Times 18/11/70, 8. Comment: "The play achieves the near-impossible in creating a believable genius in its own words (Times). "Robert Bernal's physically accurate study of Joyce is masterly, with such a pouring out of words and thoughts that one trembles for his memory (Stage).

Comment: A knock-about production that was more concerned with comic business than exploring the text for subtle meanings (Times). "Some of it is exceedingly funny; some of the interruptions are not. There is no scaffolding of reason" (Illustrated London News). The production was "without any kind of setting and with only the barest of props ... played by a predominantly young cast and aimed at a primarily youthful audience ... [and] vibrantly alive" (Stage).

Comment: MPS 223, 236. "An absorbing night if you do not ask for theatricality, shock treatment, feverish soul-searching, and the restricted vocabulary of our modish drama. Father and son are invariably real" (Illustrated London News). Spectator reported that, unusually for the Greenwich, West End critics and "social butterflies" turned out in full force for the first night, doubtless because John Mortimer was the author. "The first time, I believe, that a playwright of standing has published his autobiography on-stage" (New Statesman). Times said this was the best of Mortimer's full-length plays and commended Mark Dignam's performance as Mortimer senior.

Comment: Theatre Workshop. The genesis and authorship of this work is discussed in detail in George Dorris, "The Projector, The Mock Mason, and Miss Littlewood," Modern Drama, 16:3–4 (1973), 265–68. Stage (3/12/70, 8) provides further details of what was obviously a ruse to avoid legal entanglements: "Ever since 1968 when the tower blocks of flats at Ronan Point, a mile or so from the Theatre Royal, Stratford East, collapsed in mysterious circumstances, Joan Littlewood has wanted to present its story on the stage. The first idea was to present the official enquiry at a 'trial' play but this project had to dropped on legal advice; even using the actual words spoken in the court would have constituted a 'libel by omission' unless every single word was included. Then John Wells came across, in a book of old plays published in 1751, The Projector by Chetwood, a play based on a situation with so many similarities to the 1968 story that it still appears topical. Carl Davis after much research, has found the sources of most of the original music and has arranged them for this production." Reviewers tended to focus on hoax aspect of the production.

Comment: OTF enumerates some of the show's production difficulties that contributed to its short run. The official opening was postponed from 15/12/70 to 18/12/70 because of a generating equipment failure (Birmingham Post 16/12/70, 2). Spectator called it a "murky musical" which could be improved only by abandoning the book. New Statesman (29/1) reported that a preview had been "rather harrowing" and attended by a "disappointed and noisy audience"; the reviewer analyzed the morality underlying the piece. Tribune, mistakenly, attended what turned out to be a preview of the production still obviously very much "in progress." "The kind of show that gets failure a bad name" largely because of the "dismal book"; also thirty-nine musical numbers were too many (Times).

The playlets are no longer of this era, yet they are not period pieces.” The three items added up to “an engaging, lightweight evening that provides an ideal seasonal divertissement” (Times 23/12). New Statesman declared this the best of the three plays, particularly for “creating a kind of verbal chamber music.”

Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 30/12/70; apparently there were no previews. Observer called it a "handsome, conventional revival." New Statesman said Richard Eyre saw the play "essentially as a study of personal relationships." Tribune thought the production wove "an entirely permissible psychological gloss into Shaw's socially-critical fabric." Despite a good production Illustrated London News dubbed the piece a dated "curiosity." The production remained in repertory until 1/7/71.

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. "With its Hockneyfied lido costumes and tiny swimming pool, it supercharged the old comedy" (Observer). "The production abounds in clever, always apposite, ideas upon which the actors are able to build characters who behave with less illogicality than they might in a more staidly conventional production" (Stage).

70.407a Black Mass (P, 1a) Edward Bond. OVAL HOUSE 23/12/70 (Ln). Priest David Butler. Dir Roland Rees.

Plot: Demastes/2, Walford. Reviews: Stage 7/1/71, 14; Times 1/1/71, 14. Comment: Ambiance. "Roland Rees's production projects the piece as a savagely propagandist fable" (Times).

70.407b Have You Met Our Rabbit? (C) Michael Stevens. OVAL HOUSE 23/12/70 (Ln).* Cast: Stage 7/1/71, 14. Hella Prunella Scales; John Robert Coleby. Dir Ed Berman; Assist dir Gil Winfield. Review: Stage 7/1/71, 14; Times 1/1/71, 14. Comment: Ambiance. In the piece two people talk at cross-purposes but both are intelligible to the audience; with very good performances by Robert Coleby and Prunella Scales (Times).

Comment: Sadler's Wells Opera. "Pretty and lively in an updated and Englished production," and "received with pleasure" on the first night (Guardian). "Intermittently marvellous if you keep your eyes shut. Open them, and you may find it hard to believe you're witnessing professionals" (New Statesman). Times had reservations about the contemporary English setting and allusions but otherwise found virtues in Peter Coe's production. The first New York production (New Century 30/12/48) ran for 1,077 performances.

Comment: Guardian reported there were only eighty people in the audience, the curtain was delayed nineteen minutes, and Eartha Kitt delivered her lines much like she sang 'An Old Fashioned Millionaire.'" Times concurred heartily. "Eartha Kitt, with her commanding personality and her purring emphases, is herself acting in italics" (Illustrated London News). New Statesman also noted Kitt's eccentric performance. Tribune approved Kitt's performance, saying she "wiggles happily" into James's "impossible lines."

Comment: The plot involved a married man being chased by would-be brides. Guardian said the piece was dated, the dialogue was not witty, and the result was "a rather dull marriage-stakes farce." "Less a play than a recital of epigrams" (Observer). Illustrated London News enjoyed the piece, noted the various styles, and provided a list of some of the epigrams.

70.420 Patience; or, Bunthorne's Bride (Aesthetic O, 2a) W. S. Gilbert (lib) and Arthur Sullivan (mus). SADLER'S WELLS 31/12/70. Plot: Ayre, Fletcher, Gänzl, Hochman, Salem, Shipley, Sobel. Comment: D'Oyly Carte Opera Company.

Plot: Eisler, Vinson, Walford. Reviews: Guardian 9/1/71, 10; Stage 7/1/71, 17; Times 5/1/71, 9. Comment: The play needed a "more sensitive and varied production" (Guardian). "At heart [Melfi] remains a standard all-American writer, whose territory is bounded by sex, the family, and New York character types" (Times).

71.3 Iolanthe; or, The Peer and the Peri (Fairy O, 2a) W. S. Gilbert (lib) and Arthur Sullivan (mus). SADLER'S WELLS 4/1/71. Plot: Ayre, Fletcher, Gänzl, Hochman, Law, Shipley, Sobel. Comment: D'Oyly Carte Opera Company.

Comment: MPS 239. Played without an interval; the piece ran for 90 minutes. Times was unsure of the play's purpose, but the production was aided considerably by Frank Barrie's performance. Illustrated London News complained the piece was "presented in the relaxed style of a run-through," and the play's "text is apt to drift into the cheaper colloquialism, and it is not particularly intelligible to anyone unacquainted with the development of Byron's life."

Comment: Nottingham Playhouse Company. Guardian admired parts of Alan Bates's Hamlet as being masterly, intelligent, and moving; however, at times he was "vocally undervalued" and lacked humour. Observer described Bates's performance as "thoughtful, bitter and honest ... winning ... but lacks the subtlety and death-haunted magnitude the part needs." Tribune could not decide what the aim of the director was, and noted the audience was restless. Times faulted the production for failing to provide "any precise social or historical context." Illustrated London News was troubled by cuts to the text, mostly notably the opening scene.

71.10 P. C. Plod (P) The Scaffold. OPEN SPACE 12/1/71 (Lt).* Cast: WWT/16. The Scaffold, John Gorman, Roger McGough, Michael McGear. Reviews: Guardian 19/1/71, 8; New Statesman 22/1/71, 122; Stage 28/1/71, 15. Comment: The piece consisted of two short plays: Whose Dog Are You? and You're Human like the Rest of Them. Guardian said the production lacked coherence as Johnson randomly attacked various and sundry aspects of religion and religious institutions.

71.14 Bristow (P) Frank Dickens and Michael Bakewell (adpt of Dickens's cartoon strip, Bristow). ICA c. 18/1/71 (Ln).* Bristow Freddie Jones; Jones Graham Roberts; Anna Quayle, Matthew Corbett. Dir Michael Bakewell. Review: Times 19/1/71, 9. Comment: MPS 262. English Stage Company. New Statesman said the set, such as it was, resembled a drab doss house, and the acting was equally drab. Guardian dubbed the production Brechtian and thought it and some of the acting effective. Observer said Peter Gill had staged the play “as if in a madhouse ... an interesting idea, but not one to sustain a whole evening.” Illustrated London News was disappointed with most of Gill’s directorial choices. Times declared virtually every aspect of the production cut across “the grain of the work itself.”

71.16 Princess Ida; or, Castle Adamant (CO, 3a) W. S. Gilbert (lib) and Arthur Sullivan (mus). SADLER’S WELLS 18/1/71. Plot: Ayre, Bordman/5, 74–75, Gänzl, Hochman, Sobel. Comment: D’Oyly Carte Opera Company.

71.17 Bombastes Furioso (Bsq, 1a) William Barnes Rhodes. LAMB AND FLAG 19/1/71 (Ln). 1st perfd Haymarket 7/8/1810. Review: Stage 28/1/71, 16. Comment: Macklin. An excellent production of this “satire on the overwritten, almost operatic, texts favoured by certain extrovert 18th and early 19th century actors” (Stage).

71.18 Curtains (P) Tom Mallin. OPEN SPACE 19/1/71. Cast: WWT/16. Mildred Wringe Antonia Pemberton; Niall Scrimgeour Nigel Hawthorne; Gladys Spendlove Ursula Smith. Dir Michael Rudman. Reviews: New Statesman 29/1/71, 157; Times 20/1/71, 12. Comment: Times praised both Rudman’s production and the cast.

Comment: “A curious comedy about a compulsive capitalist swindler and a mad communist hotelier joining forces ... to defeat the law” (Tribune). “Artless in a rather disarming way but desultory and feeble beyond final endurance” (Guardian). Christian Science Monitor said the piece lacked Bridie’s usual traits, and only Wilfrid Hyde White was any good. Variety said the play “should have been left interred,” commended Hyde White’s performance, and, like Tribune, admired Hutchison Scott’s sets. Daily Mirror thought the cast’s talents were wasted on this unfunny comedy.

71.23 The Formation Dancers (C, 3a) Frank Marcus. Comment: The piece was performed “much too solemnly” (Christian Science Monitor). Guardian, like the audience, enjoyed the piece even though it tended to flag in places; excellent performances from Barbara Leigh Hunt and Lyndon Brook. Observer noted the play was an accurate representation of people who lived in London NW 1. Times observed that, as a comedy of middle age, Marcus’s 1964 play began a theme taken up “in their different ways [by] John Osborne, Peter Nichols, David Mercer and John Bowen.”

Review: Stage 11/2/71, 14. Comment: Bird in Hand Company. “Its protagonist is one of those dreadful mixed-up American girls whose problems drive her family and friends to amateur psychiatry and despair. The dialogue is literate, but I never believed in the characters sufficiently to become engrossed in their miseries” (Stage).

Comment: MPS 190. Alan Badel (Kean) gave a “splendidly flamboyant performance in a bravura role” (Guardian 29/1); Observer said the same, adding the whole production was full of “shameless melodramatic gusto.” Christian Science Monitor reported the production “had a triumphant first night.” In addition to Badel’s brilliant performance, Variety extended praise to Ken Wynne and Felicity Kendal, as did Times.

Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 3/2/71; apparently there were no previews. Observer reported a rumored naked performance by Anthony Hopkins did not materialize; nevertheless, it was an unmissable performance, supported by a "constantly ingratiating" one from Jim Dale. Guardian missed "a powerful verbal expression of pessimism" amidst the "visual and aural conception" of the production. Similarly, Christian Science Monitor thought the elaborate production detracted from the play and "outclassed" the actors. Tribune was also overwhelmed by all the production "business" and wanted to hear what the actors might be saying. Times described Victor Garcia's production as "a superbly arrogant magnification of the play, aiming to break down audience indifference by physical assault." The production remained in repertory until 30/7/71.

71.35 Chrononhotonthologos (Bsq, 1a) Henry Carey. LAMB AND FLAG 2/2/71 (Ln). 1st perfd Haymarket 22/2/1734. Plot: Law. Review: Stage 11/2/71, 13. Comment: Macklin. A strong production of this piece which "defies plot analysis, but the entire farrago of nonsense is sheer delight, drawing on Shakespeare and others for quotations, plus extravagances of language" (Stage).

71.36 Endgame (D, 1a) Samuel Beckett. YOUNG VIC STUDIO 2/2/71. Cast: WWT/16. Hamm Harold Innocent; Clov Desmond McNamara; Nagg Sam Kelly; Nell Denise Coffey. Dir Peter James; Dec Anusia Nieradzik. Plot: Demastes/2, Fletcher, French, French/2, Gassner, Griffiths, Hischak, Hochman, Law, Matlaw, Patterson, Salem, Schrank, Shank, Vinson, Walford, Weintraub. Reviews: Birmingham Post 2/2/71, 2; Christian Science Monitor 12/2/71, 4; Illustrated London News 13/2/71, 33; Times 2/2/71, 12. Comment: Times remarked how aspects of the staging (in a new auditorium within the Young Vic) imposed difficulties upon the cast. "The fable of Endgame has a bleak tedium that grows with any new revival, though I must say that the Young Vic company works anxiously to mitigate it" (Illustrated London News).

71.37 Loki (P of Ragnarok, 1a) Paddy Fletcher. Review: Stage 11/2/71, 13. Comment: Incubus. "This version sees [Loki] as a sort of Lucifer-Judas figure, spawning war and discord. It is all very symbolic and attempts to be on three levels at once, succeeding usually in falling off them in the process" (Stage).

71.38 Three Duets (P, 3 episodes) Ronald Hart. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 3/2/71.* Cast: Stage 11/2/71, 14. Waitress, Secretary, Lady Enid Burton, Customer, Salesman, Man Stuart Eames. Dir Roger Butterworth; Dgn Stuart Jennings; Mus Chas. Greetham; Sm Nicky Chrimes. Review: Stage 11/2/71, 14. Comment: For Stage the three episodes constituted "an unsatisfactory fusion of related ideas.”

71.39 After Haggerty (C, 2a) David Mercer. CRITERION 4/2/71. Cast: RSCA; Theatricalia; Variety 24/2/71, 58; WWT/16. Bernard Frank Finlay/Barry Foster; Clare Billie Whitelaw; Roger David Wood; Chris John White; Mr. Link Leslie Sands/Sebastian Shaw; Interpreters Valerie Colgan, Merdel Jordine, Alec Wallis; Actors Brett Forrest, Merdel Jordine, Valerie Colgan, Malcolm Kaye; Delivery Men Lewis Wilson/John Comer, Alec Wallis. Chm, Mgr dir Donald Albery; Assist mgr dir Ian B, Albery; Consultant V. Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. “Haggerty? He never appears, but his presence is everywhere in a play which has a lot to say—though never obviously—about such diverse topics as Communism, homosexuality and the generation gap. It is also a warm, compassionate study of characters who are not all that very warm or compassionate” (Daily Mirror). Guardian commended Frank Finlay, Leslie Sands, and Billie Whitelaw, but not “the play’s sprawling and laboured content.” New Statesman also thought the play was “prolix, untidy,” but was favorably disposed towards it. Observer said the play had been “reconstituted and tightened up.” “What the play does achieve is to put Mercer in a class by himself as the only equivalent of a Continental intellectual writing for the British stage” (Times). Variety thought the play might have a long run.

71.40 Under Milk Wood (P, 2a) Dylan Thomas (abridged Mary Jones). COCKPIT 5/2/71 (Ln). Eira Griffiths, Patricia Hope, Carole Mowlam, Peter Clough, Sion Probert. Dir Mary Jones. Plot: Best/57, 86, Bordman/4, 346, Fletcher, French/2, Griffiths, Hischak, Hochman, Law, Loney, 299, Matlaw, Patterson, Salem, Shank, Weintraub. Review: Stage 11/2/71, 15. Comment: Cambrian Company. “The packed house suggested that Dylan Thomas’s verse village portrait has suffered that fate worse than death which lies in wait for all classics; it has become a set book”; however, this abridgement removed the play’s subtleties.

71.41 The Collector (Thriller) David Parker (adpt of John Fowles’s novel, 1963). KING’S HEAD 8/2/71.* Cast: Stage 18/2/71, 17; Theatricalia. Miranda Annette André; Clegg Brian McDermott. Dir Jeremy Young; Set Ronald J. Simpson; Light, Sm Martin Staines. Reviews: New Statesman 19/2/71, 250; Observer 14/2/71, 21; Stage 18/2/71, 17; Times 9/2/71, 10. Comment: “A well-tooled adaptation ... a two-handed guignol with overtones” (Observer). New Statesman thought the adaptation was an improvement on Fowles’s “surely overrated fable”; the acting was “intelligent.” Times, which also commended the production, reported that thirty-five shillings “is very little to pay for a three-course meal and a show,” and enjoyed “sitting at a table with a drink during the performance.”

71.42 Glamorous Night (MP [2a]) Ivor Novello (bk, mus) and Christopher Hassall (lyr). WIMBLEDON 8/2/71. 1st perfd Drury Lane 2/5/35. Militza June Bronhill; Olive Gilbert. Pd, Dir Alexander Bridge. Plot: French, Gänzl, Gänzl/3, 419–22, Kennedy, OTF. Comment: June Bronhill was injured by a curtain falling on her on 10/2/71; however, after a 30 minute break, she finished the performance (Daily Mirror 11/2/71, 5).

71.43 Harvey (C, 3a) Mary Chase. Findlater gives Steve Gooch as the translator. Observer reported the theatre had been turned into “a singing pub with a nightly cabaret” for this production. As Times noted, the reason for that approach was because the cast was “made up of the nucleus of the Ken Campbell Road Show ... They are not strong on cultural reverence.”

71.44b Brecht in 26 (Collage) Keith Dewhurst. THEATRE

Dir Margaret Prior; Sm Jason Davis. Review: Stage 18/2/71, 19. Comment: The piece posited that "Christ was the dream-child of the rulers of another planet some 2,000 years ago," but this off-beat fantasy "went disastrously wrong" (Stage).

Comment: Musical Workshop. A tryout production for 4 performances. The piece, which dealt with "the rise to fame of a cartoon artist and the manner in which his creation Audrey enters his fantasies," needed development" (Stage).

Comment: Like Don't Start without Me, "the kind of prick-and-knickers farce you still find at seaside resorts" (New Statesman). "Old-fashioned bucolic farce—leering, predictable and rather simple-minded rural sexcapades," suitable for the indiscriminating only (Variety). Times described the piece as a lunatic aberration, "all Mummerset and wagging bottoms, slack jaws and graceless tussles."

The "piece, one of eleven which make up a cycle called 'Gargoyle Cartoons,' is virtually a monologue for the caricature creature of the title and makes its point by niggling away at the subconscious" (Stage). Times said there was little to the play apart from "McClure's favoured style of interminable word-killing repetition."

71.55 After Liverpool (P) James Saunders. QUESTORS 17/2/71.* Review: Acton Gazette 25/2/71, 12. Comment: Acton Gazette thought that the play was amateurish and too long.

Comment: Christian Science Monitor reported Ingrid Bergman received "a terrific reception" on opening night. Guardian said Bergman "sounded monotonous," Joss Ackland was "rather one track," and Kenneth Williams was like a good cockney Buttons in the panto. "Williams cavorts in outrageous fashion and brings every drop of fun from his cheerful Cockney sparrow role. With its African setting, sheiks, sultans and funny pirates, this play is the nearest Shaw got to writing panto. But who wants to see the bewitching Miss Bergman stranded in a sea of unfunny jokes?" (Daily Mirror). Illustrated London News declared Bergman was wrong for her role. Variety thought Bergman was the sole justification for digging up this piece. Tribune said the production possessed an "air of unreality" which was emphasized by the "make-do-and-mend set, an adaptable mock-up of wishy-washy rocks and wavy clouds." "A damp squib" (Observer). For Times the production amounted to "an empty and puerile charade." The first New York production (Empire 28/1/07) ran for 14 performances.

Comment: Alan Dobie gave an honest if unpoetic portrayal of Macbeth, the supporting cast was weak, but Roger Butlin's set was "an unqualified success" (Observer). Christian Science Monitor said "fresh thinking" had gone into Ewan Hooper's production and Macbeth was "revealed as a man who has been cruelly tricked by fate and robbed of all the glories and happiness he had a right to expect." Times listed all the difficulties of staging Macbeth, and, apart from Dobie's "rather grey and hollow performance," thought "Ewan Hooper's production gets nearer the centre of the play than more ambitious revivals."

71.59 Captain Swing at the Penny Gaff (P, 3a) Paul Thompson and Bert Edwards and Arthur Duncan. UNITY 19/2/71.* Review: Stage 25/2/71, 17; Tribune 2/4/71, 6–7. Comment: A charity perf was given on 25/3 in aid of the National Union of Agricultural and Allied Workers. The play was about the 1830 uprising by agricultural workers. Stage commended the production and noted the theatre was "returning to its grass roots, for it has at last found a socio-historical play of the kind that was fairly common when this theatre was making a mark on the London scene during the first few years of its life."

71.60 The Empire Builders (D, 3a) Boris Vian (trans Simon Watson Taylor of Les bâtisseurs d'empire, ou le Schmurz, 1959). TOWER, CANONBURY, 19/2/71. Cast: TTC. Plot: Hochman, Matlaw, 792, Patterson. Comment: Also given one performance at the Collegiate 5/4/71.

Plot: Vinson, Walford. Reviews: Stage 25/2/71, 15; Times 24/2/71, 10. Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company/Studio Production. A note in RSCA indicates the production date was 1/2/71; Schiele confirms 22/2/71, as does Stage 18/2/71, 18. "Janet Henfry's direction uses the cast of three, Madeleine Cannon, Miles Anderson and Christopher Biggins, to recreate the playground-game patterns of children's behaviour in a realistic manner underlining the horror of a fantasy situation ending in death" (Stage). Times commended Brenton for "his mastery as a theatrical story-teller."

71.63 The Heiress (P) Ruth Goetz and Augustus Goetz (suggested by Henry James's Washington Square, 1881). RICHMOND 22/2/71; trfd to WIMBLEDON 8/3/71. Sylvia Syms, Joseph O'Connor, Eric Flynn, Mary Hignett, Bessie Love. Lic, Gen mgr Frederic Piffard.

The play was about a young man trying to prove to himself and friends that he is not homosexual. "Young authors ... will keep on writing this story for ever, and anyone who dismisses it as a platitude is only revealing his own hardening arteries" (Times). Christian Science Monitor said the play treated the topic with sympathy and "impeccable taste." The play failed to ultimately engage Stage.

Comment: MPS 257. Guardian said the force of the play was somewhat diluted in being transferred from television to the stage; Jeremy Kemp and Anna Massey did not explore their characters' "undercurrents," while Simon Ward "inhabits his part utterly." Observer also pointed to the difference between the television and stage presentations. "Ingeniously written, delicately directed and well acted" (Variety). Daily Mirror described the play as lightweight, disappointing, and dated. Times pointed out this was the second formulaic play to be staged in the same week, the other being A Game Called Arthur; Spoiled was the more successful.

Comment: MPS 240. "An evening of unusual and insufferable boredom" (Guardian). However, Observer said the writing was "splendid, alive with witty intelligence," and the characters were Shavian. Tribune's opinion fell between these latter two reviews. "Has good moments but is too mixed-up to sustain. The several themes are not well organized ... due for a short run" (Variety). "A very foolish and pretentious exercise" (Spectator). Illustrated London News was largely baffled by the plot. Eveling's "finest play so far, he emerges as one of the most exciting dramatists we have" (Times).

Plot: Best/62, 140, Demastes/2, Fletcher, Hochman, Salem, Weintraub. Review: Stage 11/3/71, 14. Comment: "Timing of lines and pauses, of particular importance in a Pinter play, has been worked out by [David] Andrews to a degree of accuracy which appears spontaneous yet holds the tenuous strands of a plot taut almost to the point of snapping, and his cast work with complete understanding of his aims" (Stage).

Comment: Spectator thought there was "a touch of puppetry" to the characters, but they were "beautifully played by Ian McShane, Richard Kane and Maria Aitken." Illustrated London News also thought the plot was contrived and commended Mary Merrall's performance. "A touching, witty evening" (Observer). Times praised the play (apart from some facile climaxes to each scene) and the production.

Tribune 12/3/71, 11. Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian (2/3) felt the translation was “strangely stilted,” while Tribune called it “fluent.” Observer said William Gaskill directed the play as “a homely line of Carry On military comedy,” with “enormously cheerful” performances by the cast. Times noted the “machine gun crew” was played by cast members of the Ken Campbell Road Show. Tribune thought Gaskill had taken liberties with the script, notably by speeding up the action instead of giving it the “leisurely pacing” it requires.

Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 9/3/71; apparently there were no previews. Variety noted Paul Scofield “received an ovation” from both audience and cast, and praised the “large supporting ensemble” acting. Tribune praised Frank Dunlop’s direction for bringing to “splendid life many of the scenes in this discursive time-spanning play.” Guardian pointed to numerous details in the production which resulted in “so much undated-seeming fun.” Times joined the chorus of approval. The production remained in repertory until 27/11/71.

71.73 The Informer (P, 1a) Bertolt Brecht (trans Eric Bentley). KING’S HEAD 2/3/71 (Ln). 1st British perf. Cast: Stage 11/3/71, 13. Husband Ken Parry; Wife Jackie Ellis; Boy Gary Fox; Maid Helli Louise. Dir Paul Thompson; Dgn Rita Furzey; Sm Jacqui Byford. Plot: French/2, French/2, Hochman, Matlaw, Patterson, Salem, Shipley. Reviews: Stage 11/3/71, 13; Times 4/3/71, 13. Comment: Soho Theatre. The playlet formed part nine, ‘Der Spitzel,’ of Furcht und Elend des dritten Reiches, 1938; Eric Bentley gave this work the title The Private Life of the Master Race. Times wanted the whole of Brecht’s piece to be staged.

71.74 Requiem for Romeo and Juliet (Ent, 12pt). YOUNG VIC 2/3/71. Reviews: Birmingham Post 6/3/71, 2; Illustrated London News 13/3/71, 31; London Magazine (August/September, 1971), 128–29; Stage 11/3/71, 13; Times 5/3/71, 19. Comment: Les Tréteaux Libres. The production involved “being stepped on and over, fondled, ruffled, screamed at and spat upon by practically naked actors,” which resulted in some audience members leaving before the end, which Stage wanted to do as well. Times panned the production and the intentions of the company; “this is Theatre of Embarrassment.”

71.75 Pignight (P, 1a) Snoo Wilson. YOUNG VIC 4/3/71. 1st London perf? Cast: Stage 11/3/71, 15. Jasmin Merchant, Mrs. Mullen Paul Freeman; Raymond Gibbs, Mr. Mullen Darryl Kovann; The Voice of Mr. Bravington, Smitty Peter Brenner. Dir Snoo Wilson. Plot: Demastes/2, Vinson, Walford. Reviews: Stage 11/3/71, 15; Times 5/3/71, 19. Comment: Portable Theatre Company. Times indicated the production transferred to the King’s Head on 8/3/71. This “savage and disenchanting portrait of rural life” was not as good as Rudkin’s Afore Night Come, and the “central argument [was] illogical” (Times).

71.76a The Eumenides (T) Aeschylus (trans Philip Vellacott). TOWER, CANONBURY, 5/3/71. Cast: TTC. Plot: Fletcher, Gassner, Hochman, Patterson, Salem, Shank, Shipley.

71.76b The Libation Bearers (T) Aeschylus (trans Philip Vellacott). TOWER, CANONBURY, 5/3/71. 1st perfd 458 B.C. Cast: TTC. Plot: Gassner, Hochman.

71.77 In the Bar of a Tokyo Hotel (P, 2pt) Tennessee Williams. ST. MARY ABBOTS THEATRE 8/3/71. 1st perfd Eastside Playhouse, New York, 11/5/69; 1st British perf. Miriam Celia Gregory; Davis Hall. Dir Peter Lindsay. Plot: Bordman/4, 433, Bronner, Heintzelman, Hochman, MacNicholas. Review: Stage 18/3/71, 14. Comment: Studio '68. "Peter Lindsay's fluid direction moulded Celia Gregory's performance into something of compelling power, full of undisguised sexuality" (Stage). The New York production ran for 25 performances.

71.78 It's Never Too Late (Revue). UNITY 12/3/71 (Lt).* Raymond Cross, Laurence Davies, Charles Blackmore, Doreen Farrier, Janet Gillis, Vince Wilkinson. Dir Raymond Cross, Laurence Davies. Review: Stage 18/3/71, 15. Comment: The return of the Conservatives to political power provided the production with plenty of material (Stage).

71.79 John Ford's Cuban Missile Crisis (P) the company. OPEN SPACE 15/3/71. 1st London perf. Reviews: Daily Mirror 16/3/71, 18; New Statesman 2/4/71, 471; Observer 21/3/71, 34; Times 16/3/71, 18; Tribune 2/4/71, 6-7. Comment: There were earlier performances at the Zagreb International Festival of Student Theatre 9/70; Playhouse, Bradford, 11/70, and elsewhere. See also Theatre Quarterly, No. 1. Tribune described the piece as "edge-of-apocalypse politics sent-up in the style of a vintage Western movie." "This is participation theatre about non-participation politics, technically amateurish by choice in order that no one mistake the genuineness of what it has to say" (Observer). "Even at its clumsiest it has the quality of personal dedication" (Times). Daily Mirror reported "the mainly young audience gave it a good reception. More mature audiences will probably find many of the sentiments naive."

71.80 The Long and the Short and the Tall (D, 2pt) Willis Hall. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB c. 15/3/71. Cast: Stage 18/3/71, 15. Review: Stage 18/3/71, 15. Comment: Performed under the collective title Playbag. "A pleasant lunacy about the legal ethics arising from the decision of a viscount to make his wife also his niece" (Stage).

71.82b Our Girls Are Famous (P, 1a) Carl Forgione. BASEMENT THEATRE 15/3/71 (Ln). 1st British perf. Cast: Stage 18/3/71, 15. Caraway Roger Lloyd Pack; Humblebum Michael Craze. Dir Carl Forgione; Dgn Ronald Simpson; Sm Mollie Kirkland. Review: Stage 18/3/71, 15. Comment: Performed under the collective title Playbag. The play consisted of an interview "for what would appear to be a pornographic modelling job with extras, both actors starkers except for clipboard and briefcase" (Stage).

71.82c The Unsatisfactory Supper (P, 1a) Tennessee Williams. BASEMENT THEATRE 15/3/71 (Ln).* Cast: Stage 18/3/71, 15. Baby Doll Miranda Forbes; Archie Lee Edward Phillips; Aunt Rose Mary Hughes. Dir Frances Rifkin; Dgn Ronald Simpson; Sm Mollie Kirkland. Plot: Heintzelman, MacNicholas. Review: Stage 18/3/71, 15. Comment: Performed under the collective title Playbag. The full title of the piece is The Long Stay Cut Short or the Unsatisfactory Supper.

Comment: Guardian said the characters were stereotyped and the play was cleverly constructed "to extract the maximum of nervy suspense" from the "loathsome melodrama." "A confused study of evil," a "pseudo-philosophical work ... unlikely to repeat its Broadway success" (Variety). "Joseph Hardy's production attempts to heighten foreboding with many slow menacing entries and long pauses; but it adds only to the portentousness of a notably unthrilling evening" (Times). Illustrated London News confessed to responding fully to the play's effects during the performance, but felt entirely differently once away from the theatre. The play's original title was The Dark. The New York production ran for 342 performances.

71.84 Forward with the Crutch (Revue) Dudley Stevens (deviser) and Geoffrey Brawn (mus). LITTLE THEATRE CLUB 17/3/71 (Ln).* Cast: Stage 25/3/71, 14. Doreen Hermitage, Valerie Lloyd, Eleanor McReady, Deryk Parkin, Dudley Stevens. Pres ANKH Productions; Dir Dudley Stevens. Review: Stage 25/3/71, 14. Comment: "The material itself is original, crisply written, strictly contemporary in spirit and performed with brisk attack and professional polish" (Stage).

71.85 The Foursome (P, 1a) E. A. Whitehead. THEATRE UPSTAIRS 17/3/71; trfd to FORTUNE 4/5/71.* Cast: Findlater; Stage 25/3/71, 14; Theatricalia; Variety 16/6/71, 58; WWT/16. Comment: MPS 252. English Stage Company. The piece was expanded to two acts when it transferred to the Fortune. Christian Science Monitor called Whitehead "a man of sincere conviction and of considerable dramatic talent." Observer (9/5) said the extended version weakened the play's impact. Tribune described the extension as a sea-change, "from a small-scale study of group sadness to the slightly kinky seaside seduction." Variety noted the play featured full-frontal male nudity. Times praised Whitehead's ability to infuse a banal situation with "emotional and social resonance." The first New York production (Astor Place 12/11/73) ran for 24 performances.

71.86 The Good and Faithful Servant (P, 19sc) Joe Orton. KING'S HEAD 17/3/71 (Ln). 1st perfd ITV/Rediffusion 6/4/67; 1st stage perf. George Buchanan

Comment: Guardian (2/4) pointed out that, like Mortimer's recent A Voyage Round My Father, the play was autobiographical and employed a remote, on-stage hero-narrator, and had an "episodic and inconclusive structure." Observer thought the play would appeal equally to provincial and West End audiences, but it needed "cutting and polishing." Tribune said the theme was well-worn, but presented with freshness and compassion. "Brilliantly evocative entertainment ... impeccably cast, smoothly and eloquently staged by Michael Blakemore" (Variety). Times thought Nichols had managed to convert "common life into significance."

71.105a The Gymnasium (P, 1a) Olwen Wymark. COCKPIT 1/4/71; trfd to LAMB AND FLAG 5/4/71. 1st perfd Mickery, Amsterdam, 19/10/67. Comment: Frilliam Productions. Cast: Stage 8/4/71, 15. Ian Barritt, Jeremy Chandler. Dir Michael Hucks. Reviews: Stage 8/4/71, 15; Times 6/4/71, 13. Comment: The piece involved a boxing sparring session as a form of marital therapy. "An extremely cunning piece of work" (Times).

71.105b Liquid (Satirical C, 1a) David Mowat. COCKPIT 1/4/71; trfd to LAMB AND FLAG 5/4/71.* Cast: Stage 8/4/71, 15. Paul Arlington, Susan Glanville, Crispin Gildard. Dir Frances Riskin; Dgn Ronald Simpson. Reviews: Stage 8/4/71, 15; Times 6/4/71, 13. Comment: Frilliam Productions. Times conjectured the play was "meant to offer satiric insights into the absurdities of the army mentality," but did so unsuccessfully.

71.106 Hanky Park (P, 2a) Walter Greenwood (adpt of his autobiography, There Was a Time, 1967). Comment: Guardian appreciated Greenwood's outrage at the still-relevant "industrial hell" of his childhood portrayed in this competently acted piece. "A sound social document" even if it is "not much more than a series of sketches" (Irish Times). "A loving eye for human detail" (Observer); Illustrated London News agreed wholeheartedly. Times said Greenwood needed to be more selective in his adaptation and to provide greater unity.

71.107 Black Girl (P) Rory O'Briain Bell. UNITY 2/4/71. Review: Stage 8/4/71, 15. 1st perf? Comment: Kunapipi Company. About "the tragic effects of White Australia's policy on a migrant black girl" (Stage 1/4/71, 8).

A workmanlike production by Jonathan Miller, taken at "a rattling pace" (Tribune). Times reported the play had been cut down to three hours and the production was a mix of orthodox and new ideas.

71.109 Max Adrian in Gilbert and Sullivan (One-man Ent). HAYMARKET 5/4/71. 1st perfd Guildhall of St. George, King's Lynn, 29/7/69 as Gilbert and Sullivan. Cast: WWT/16. Max Adrian. Comment: Roland Joffe's production was directed at youthful playgoers and featured "bare feet, naked chests, circus clowning and minimal props" (Observer). The production "swings eclectically from stark and sombre tragedy to dutifully cheerful comedy" (Times). Illustrated London News complained that most of the cast had "an apparent lack of interest in the language for its own sake."

71.111 Vincent (One-man P) W. Gordon Smith. HAMPSTEAD 5/4/71. 1st perfd Phoenix, Leicester, 18/11/70. Cast: Stage 15/4/71, 13; WWT/16. Van Gogh Tom Fleming. Comment: National Theatre. Press night was 7/4/71; apparently there were no previews. Observer praised John Dexter for revealing the “complex strangeness” of the play, but the cast was less successful in conveying Heywood’s “pure, direct” emotions. “The production does not leave you with any clear impression of why the play was thought worth reviving” (Times). “A brilliantly coloured, charming, human work from which can be drawn a shining and detailed picture of a certain section of domestic life in Elizabethan England,” with fine performances from Joan Plowright and Anthony Hopkins (Stage); Illustrated London News shared those conclusions. The production remained in repertory until 31/1/71.

71.114 Meet Me in London (Ent, 2pt). ADELPHI 7/4/71. Reviews: Stage 22/4/71, 15; Times 14/4/71, 10. Comment: Soho Theatre. In the play Blubber and God are both contemplating suicide, and Blubber decides to do so in order that “that the two of them can start a new life together on Mars” (Stage). Times thought the play was dissociated “from its material” and was “a pitiful private case-history.”

71.119a The Deed (P) Philip Martin. MERCURY 13/4/71.* Cast: Stage 15/4/71, 8. Carole Hayman, Malcolm Ingram. Dir Michael Wearing. Comment: Quipu.

Comment: Studio Workshops. “An African play about a chief still in love with one of his wives who is apparently barren. It seems almost Elizabethan or Jacobean” (Stage).

71.120b Tree (P) Richard Franklin. LITTLE THEATRE CLUB c. 13/4/71.* Cast: Stage 15/4/71, 13. Helen Blatch, Randolfe Frank, Teddie Gray, Peg Sweeney, Timothy Woodward. Dir Derek Oldfield. Review: Stage 29/4/71, 10. Comment: Studio Workshops. “A nonsense piece, in the Lear-Carroll sense, about a ‘Come Dancing’ addicted husband and wife, their arty-crafty son played by two actors, one black, one white and a rug that becomes a scarlet tree of knowledge that eventually blossoms” (Stage).

71.121 One at Night (D, 3a) Dennis Cannan. COURT 13/4/71.* Cast: Findlater; Stage 22/4/71, 13; Variety 19/5/71, 76; WWT/16. James Blanch Roy Dotrice; Miss Hope June Jago; *The Rev. Comment: MPS 258. English Stage Company. Spectator declared the characters were “little more than weary clichés from an amateur psychologist’s stockpot.” Christian Science Monitor panned the piece. Variety dubbed it a lecture, but with good performances from Roy Dotrice and Frances Cuka. “Grinds boringly away at the litany of what rotten old society has done to schizophrenic” (New Statesman). The play’s theme and ideas were not embodied in realistic characters and so they failed to convince (Times).

Comment: “This is a study in the tradition of Huis Clos; two men share a prison room, and, eventually, each other’s in most being. Both profess to be representative failures, both lie about their upbringing, both are irritating” (Stage).

71.124 Savoury Meringue (C, 1a) James Saunders. ALMOST FREE 14/4/71 (Ln).* Review: New Statesman 23/4/71, 571. Comment: Ambiance. Prunella Scales played “an horny old pro” in this comic satire on the elements that comprise the theatrical product (New Statesman).

Comment: Royal Dramatic Theatre of Sweden. World Theatre Season. Ingmar Bergman's "direction is simple, stylised, often breathtakingly beautiful, created out of the four symbolic colours of black, orange, white and grey" (New Statesman). "A simple, terse production ... with indivisibly fine teamwork" (Guardian). Bergman "makes the playwright's intention clearer than the play itself" (Observer). The production helped to reveal that the play is "a work of the first magnitude" (Times).

Plot: Hochman. Reviews: Stage 29/4/71, 10; Times 27/4/71, 12; Tribune 7/5/71, 11. Comment: Schiller Theatre of West Berlin. World Theatre Season. Tribune described the play as "a sharply-etched adult fairy-tale." Times said the piece should be treated as a fairy-tale and it was "splendidly played."

71.139 Back to Square One (One-man show) Bernard Miles. MERMAID 27/4/71.* 16 perf. Reviews: Birmingham Post 29/4/71, 2; New Statesman 7/5/71, 644; Stage 6/5/71, 19; Variety 16/6/71, 54. Comment: A self-indulgent, nostalgic ramble through Miles's life (Variety).

Plot: Best/55, 163, Bordman/4, 332, Dorney, Fletcher, French/2, Hischak, Loney, 293-94, Matlaw, Salem, Shank, Vinson, Weintraub. Reviews: Birmingham Post 28/4/71, 2; Daily Mirror 28/4/71, 16; Guardian 28/4/71, 10; Illustrated London News 1/7/71, 48; New Statesman 14/5/71, 679; Stage 6/5/71, 17; Times 28/4/71, 10; Tribune 7/5/71, 11; Variety 12/5/71, 232. Comment: At first Guardian found this revival "glum," but it gradually improved thanks to performances by Gladys Cooper and Joan Greenwood. Tribune found the performances were unable to cover the deficiencies of the thin plot. Variety agreed the performances of the leading actresses made the evening entertaining. Times mounted a spirited defense for the play as being as worthy of revival as, say, Look Back in Anger, another play from 1956. "It is at the right theatre, it has the right cast and it should draw audiences who like civilised if slightly scatty chat from civilised, if slightly scatty genteel English characters" (Daily Mirror). The first New York production (Ethel Barrymore 26/10/55) ran for 182 performances.

71.141 Anarchist (P) Michael Almaz. THEATRE

UPSTAIRS 28/4/71.* Cast: Findlater; Stage 6/5/71, 20; WWT/16. Sergey Nechaev Jeffrey Shankley; Mikhail Bakunin John Malcolm; Nikolai Ogarev Leonard Fenton; Karl Marx John Grillo; Antonia (Tonia Bakunin) Deborah Norton; Woman, Girl Student, Madame V, Nathalie Hertsen Gillian Brown; Customs Officer, Ivanov, Porter, Soldier Brian Croucher; Carlo Gambuzzi, Count Orlov, Lyubavin Miles Reithermann. Dir Chris Parr; Dgn William Dudley; Songs Tony Isaacs; Dsm Sally A. Crocker. Reviews: New Statesman 7/5/71, 644; Stage 6/5/71, 20; Times 29/4/71, 10. Comment: English Stage Company. The production lasted three-and-a-half hours. Almaz provided "an eventful story" about [Russian anarchist and revolutionary] Mikhail Bakunin and the people around him, but the piece lacked "stage action" (Times).

71.142 Little Malcolm and His Struggle against the Eunuchs (CD, 3a) David Halliwell. Plot: Demastes/2, Fletcher, French, French/2, Gassner, Griffiths, Hischak, Hochman, Law, Matlaw, Patterson, Salem, Schrank, Shank, Vinson, Walford, Weintraub. Reviews: Stage 6/5/71, 20; Times 30/4/71, 10; Tribune 7/5/71, 11. Comment: Schiller Theatre of West Berlin. World Theatre Season. Both items were directed by Beckett. For Tribune two Beckett plays in one evening constituted overload. Times said the production did not rise to a level requiring superlatives.

71.143b Krapp's Last Tape (Monol) Samuel Beckett. ALDWYCH 29/4/71. Cast: WWT/16. Krapp Martin Held. Pres, Dir, Dec as for 71.143a. Plot: Demastes/2, Fletcher, French, French/2, Hochman, Law, Matlaw, Patterson, Salem, Schrank, Vinson, Walford, Weintraub. Reviews: Stage 6/5/71, 20; Times 30/4/71, 10; Tribune 7/5/71, 11. Comment: Schiller Theatre of West Berlin. World Theatre Season. Brilliantly performed by Martin Held (Tribune). Held had actually improved on his great performance of the previous year (Times).

71.144 The Lady from the Sea (D) Henrik Ibsen (trans Michael Meyer of Fruen fra havet, 1889). GREENWICH

Plot: Bryan, French/2, Hochman, Matlaw, Patterson, Shipley. Reviews: Birmingham Post 30/4/71, 2; Illustrated London News 1/7/71, 48; Stage 6/5/71, 17; Times 1/5/71, 19. Comment: Times praised Meyer's "briskly eloquent" translation, but found the production did not capture the "music and wide romantic landscapes" Ibsen intended. "Sue Plummer did her best to fit the complex scenes ... into a permanent set. It was managed inventively, on the whole; even if the acting wanted the haunted sense of one of Ibsen's most haunted plays" (Illustrated London News).

71.145 A New Communion for Freaks, Prophets and Witches (P) Jane Arden (deviser). OPEN SPACE 29/4/71. 1st perfd Traverse, Edinburgh, 8/4/71. Cast: Stage 15/4/71, 15. Comment: Women's Liberation Movement. "A nightmarish melange of mime and song and dance and soliloquy, all strobing lights and naked bodies and tortured language, darkly illuminating the theme that society is a criminal asylum where women grow crazy serving a life sentence playing mum" (New Statesman).

71.146 The Ghost Train (P, 3a) Arnold Ridley. The same company performed this play at the 1965 Edinburgh Festival. Coincidentally, the play in a translation by Frederick Davies was presented by ORBIT Arts, Cambridge, 19/4/71. "A high spirited and generally delightful account" that induced chuckles rather than "panic laughter" (Guardian). The production "revolved giddily and uproariously, with frequent lapses into opera and music hall" (Observer). "The show overflows with marvellous business, but it is there to make solid comic points" (Times).

71.149 Confrontation (P) Hans Keuls. ROUND HOUSE 4/5/71. 1st perfd Theatre Royal, Norwich, 19/4/71. Plot: Stage 29/4/71, 10. Reviews: Birmingham Post 5/5/71, 2; Times 5/5/71, 10. Comment: Times said the play was too heavy-handed in drawing parallels between ancient Rome and modern America.

71.150 The Grave (C) Melville Lovatt. Comment: National Theatre. Observer said the text “has been so abbreviated and reaccented that the result is virtually a new play, written in choppy prose.” Illustrated London News also complained about the textual cutting. “One of the poorest accounts of the play ... moves at a snail’s pace” (Guardian 9/5). A “singularly incoherent production by Manfred Wekwerth and Joachim Tenschert ... and some glaringly implausible acting” (Times). Tribune said the production was “riveting” as a political play. “Impressively acted by Anthony Hopkins, John Moffatt, Constance Cummings and Denis Quilley” (Daily Mirror). The production remained in repertory until 10/7/71.

Comment Guardian found the first act interesting, but the second reverted to clichés and arbitrary plot resolution. Observer agreed, but commended performances by Leonard Rossiter and Peter McEnery. Times thought the play strived for theatrical moments at the expense of plausibility; it was, however, “extremely well-cast.” Variety noted the play’s defects but thought it worthy of a West End transfer.

Comment: MPS 242. The cast included seven members of the original New York cast (Stage 8/4/71, 8). "Banal, tedious, boring, unfunny and devoid of wit. It is utterly devastatingly dreary. It is the highest smelling load of old garbage ever to come out of America. It lasts only one hour and twenty-five minutes but for me it was an eternity of awfulness" (Daily Mirror). "This took about an hour and three-quarters, and I could have suggested a cut of roughly an hour and forty minutes" (Illustrated London News). Guardian was unimpressed by the satire but said the cast looked quite cheerful when engaged in naked group sex. Observer amused itself by trying to explain the sex scene to one of its offspring. Variety wondered whether London audiences would appreciate the American "flavor," but added the Duchess was "a good house for the production in terms of intimacy and sight lines."

The production, performed on "a stage raked at an angle of 45 degrees," was "an artistic triumph" (Christian Science Monitor). Observer called it both "a one-note evening" and "the best rendering of a Genet play I've seen." The production "stressed the hierarchical elements, even lowering madame on a trapeze" (Tribune). Times said the effects translated "Genet's abstract glorification of the criminal and the beggar into a physical reality."

71.167 Play It Again, Sam (C, 3a) Woody Allen. RICHMOND 17/5/71. Allan Felix Dave King; Bogart Bill Kerr. Plot: Bordman, Bordman/4, 431, Bronner, Fletcher, French/2, Salem. Comment: A one-week engagement.

Comment: "This stock company revival ... comes across as just adequate," but Cliff Richard is "plainly miscast" (Variety); Times shared the same verdict. In 1958 John Gielgud in the same role drew a similar criticism (Wearing 58.20). The New York production ran for 143 performances.

71.170 Corunna! (Ballad mus) Keith Dewhurst (bk, lyr) and Tim Hart (bk, lyr) and Steeleye Span (mus). THEATRE UPSTAIRS 18/5/71.* Cast: Findlater; WWT/16. Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian (19/5) detected affinities with Brecht rather than John Gay in describing the piece as a "ballad opera." Times felt "the exuberance of the format" tended to "obscure the painfulness of the historical reality"; nevertheless, a worthwhile show.

Review: Stage 27/5/71, 11. Comment: The plot involved a couple arguing and a possible murder; however, “just as we are all thoroughly mystified the characters of the play pick themselves up, admit that the author was stuck at that point for an ending and leave us to be our own plot” (Stage).

Comment: English Stage Company. “In this new and stellar production it has become more display than play, something has been lost in the process” (Guardian). Observer said the play was now “a broader, safer play ... than Hampstead audiences saw last year.” Tribune also thought the play now seemed broader, the casting “a bit styled.” For Spectator the characters were “revealed as two-dimensional caricatures, no more—if certainly no less—than puppets of fun.” Variety said Hare had “a flair for witty dialog,” the result was a meaningless play. New Statesman regarded the play’s “prize-winning status as a measure of the paucity of new writing talent in Britain.”

Comment: The play involved two middle-aged men trapped in infantilism. Times said Wilson wrongly tried “to pin a variety of allegorical meanings onto such a tenuous situation”; nevertheless, the production and acting were good.

71.180 The Critic as Artist (P, 2a) Charles Marowitz (adpt of Oscar Wilde’s essay, 1891). Comment: Times lauded Marowitz’s “superb” adaptation which set the essay “in the context of a homosexual dinner party”; with a fine performance from Timothy West ably supported by Peter Davies. “The trouble with dramatised essays is that they usually appear to be just that, and [this piece] simply proves the rule”

(Stage).

Comment: MPS 282. Royal Shakespeare Company. "Peter Hall directs the comedy with a musician's ear for the value of each word and silence" (Observer). Christian Science Monitor offered different viewpoints of the piece as either reality or fantasy, praised Hall's direction, and the cast's performances; Variety agreed. "Old Times is about the effects of memory, the warping quality of nostalgia" (Tribune). "Theatrically, Pinter's use of the vagaries of memory, his weaving of past and present, seldom stirs me ... the play itself seems to be of very thin tissue, easily torn" (Illustrated London News). The production was notable for “Kit Surrey’s monumental set, a three-storey classical facade which blots out most of the greenery,” and a production with “a Regency atmosphere almost suggestive of Bath” (Times). “Its people of the Italian Renaissance wore costumes that seemed to me, at a venture, to be French First Empire. Not that it mattered; as usual, within a few minutes, one thought less about the production’s aspect than its speech. This varied in quality” (Illustrated London News).

Comment: Royal Shakespeare Company. A transfer of Peter Brook’s production at Stratford. “What Brook has done is to unstop our ears and allow us, at last, to hear the verse as if newly imagined ... this Dream, with its special virtuosity, its trapezes, its coiled-wire Wood, the unsullied primary colours, the ceaseless invention, is as much a mark in Shakespeare revival as Granville-Barker’s Dream was nearly 60 years ago” (Illustrated London News). Tribune said the concept worked well enough for the court and fairies, “but Bottom and company never quite fit.” Guardian did not like the production but still urged people to see it. “A new and considered interpretation in which all the dazzling decorations are legitimate manifestations of the original inspiration” (Christian Science Monitor). Times also noted there had been “many developments” since the production’s Stratford performance, and discussed some in detail.

Comment: The piece was about a concentration camp guard and a prisoner. "Mullett indulges in verbal dysentery and his images are reiterations of various forms of excreta, but certain parts of the relationship are compelling, such as the infliction of hypochondria and the mental torture of auto-suggestion which has the slave salivating at the thought of obscene food" (Stage).

"Anthony Page's direction is smooth and the playing is stylish" (Variety). Times compared the production unfavorably with the World Theatre Season one in 1966 (66.93). Comment: National Theatre. Guardian tried its best to comment positively on the production but found Giraudoux dated. Observer opined the play was an odd choice, but perhaps motivated by commercial considerations; Christopher Plummer was poorly cast as Amphitryon while Geraldine McEwan gave a “star performance.” As did other reviewers, New Statesman faulted Laurence Olivier’s direction which was neither funny nor erotic, and overlooked the play’s hyper-sensuality. Christian Science Monitor condemned Olivier’s “leering and provocative” production. Times joined the chorus of disapproval and opined the only reason for the revival was as a star show for Plummer. The production remained in repertory until 8/11/71.

Comment: Irish Times called Jonathan Miller’s production “all very austere and very abstruse, it makes for a testing evening.” Tribune disliked Robert Lowell’s “half-measured revamping” of Aeschylus. Spectator noted that in Miller’s “rather eccentric and ruthlessly humourless production [Prometheus] is not exactly bound.” Times faulted the adaptation and production, and reported that audience members were seen “nodding off.” Daily Mirror also thought the piece was sleep inducing, and that it would be better as a radio play.

Comment: The piece involved three striptease dancers and their boring work together with a scene “dealing with the questioning and torturing of an Algerian boy, played unmistakably by a girl” (Stage). Times thought Wilkinson's attempt to draw a parallel between a pornographic image and an act of political torture did not work.

Comment: A “neat and elegant” translation, a “perversely unfunny” production” (New Statesman). “Less funny” than recent staging of Feydeau (Times).

Comment: Dolphin Theatre Company. The opening of a new theatre. “An efficient, workaday” production “with Tom Bell as a tense, cross Dick Dudgeon” (New Statesman). Guardian thought the opening of a new theatre warranted “something more original and lively than [this] glum, even dismal revival.” “Rather humdrum” but with a “polished performance by Ronald Hines” (Spectator). Times discoursed on the fate of Michael Croft’s National Youth Theatre that would use this new theatre for a few weeks a year; as an opening production, Times expected a “bolder” choice from the Dolphin company.

The production was “distinguished” although the play remained enigmatic and tantalizing (Guardian). New Statesman said Peggy Ashcroft gave “a quiet, chilling ... enthralling performance,” a view shared by Times. “A static evening, despite excellent performances, especially by Peggy Ashcroft” (Variety). “For me this is a play for voices. Nothing is added by putting it on stage” (Daily Mirror).

Comment: “A black comedy ... about a corrupt evangelist keeping one step ahead of the police” (Observer). “A dire mélange of inept characterization and misfiring jokes” of which Spectator viewed only the first half before leaving at the interval. Times said this “anti-bureaucratic extravaganza” was neither original nor well-plotted, but was worthwhile for the “comic spirit” which exuded from Donald McWhinnie’s production.

71.234 Santa Cruz (P) Michael Almaz. TOTO’S 12/7/71 (Ln).* Cast: Stage 8/7/71, 14. Ann Raitt, Gillian Brown, Geoffrey Larder. Dir Michael Almaz. Review: Stage 22/7/71, 14. Comment: Although listed here alphabetically, Sweet Eros was performed before the interval, Next after. Tribune opined the reason for that might be that Next was humorous and so critics left the theatre in a good mood. "Lack of love, lack of compassion and of understanding, lack of care about each other, about other men, about our own love object, these are some of the themes, basically one major theme—lack of care—which cross through the two plays" (Stage). "Beautifully developed and economically plotted" (Times). The first New York production (Gramercy Mews 10/2/69) ran for 707 performances.

Comment: Observer noted approvingly that the production was a "combination of Artaud and pop-art," and used freely "lurid, two-dimensional colours." Guardian dubbed the production "the bard's own horror comic." Times said a cast of only ten meant the play's complications were unexplored, but praised the production for conveying "tragic pain" but eschewing sensationalism. "We saw just how bad Titus could appear, as a collocation of shocks, in a production gratingly insensitive and with at least one performance so ill-spoken that the actor seemed to be chewing every syllable" (Illustrated London News).

Comment: MPS 312. National Theatre. Press night was 20/11/71; apparently there were no previews. A celebration of William Blake. Guardian approved of most of the piece but thought parts needed revision. Variety agreed this collage could be sharper, and the soft-rock music was unmemorable. Observer said the piece was self-indulgent and would have been better as a straightforward reading of Blake's poem or as a biography. For Times the piece lacked cohesion but possessed "theatrical vitality." The production remained in repertory until 20/11/71.

Comment: MPS 224. Guardian said Alan Bates played Butley “as a sort of supercharged Everyman.” Observer (18/7/71) noted the play was “a new, considerably improved version of [Gray’s] earlier Spoiled, and called Butley “Lucky Jim 15 years later.” “Some of the wittiest and most cruel repartee that has been heard in a London theater for a long time” (Christian Science Monitor). “Directed to perfection by Harold Pinter” with a “bravura portrayal” by Alan Bates (Variety 18/8/71). Times (15/7/71) approved the play, production, and acting highly. The first New York production (Morosco 31/10/72) ran for 135 performances; Alan Bates repeated his performance.

Comment: English Stage Company. Guardian liked the play’s “variety of pace and an intensity of climax,” and noted it was performed in a single act of one hour and forty minutes. Fugard achieved “laceratingly good performances from Zakes Mokae and Yvonne Bryceland as jetsam of the veldt” (Spectator). Times found itself “simultaneously heartened by the author’s sympathy for his characters and appalled by his condemnation of their plight as totally irremediable.” The first New York production (Circle in the Square Downtown 22/6/70) ran for 205 performances.

Comment: A “miserable farce, touching with vaguely titillating intent upon a wrongful accusation of child assault” (Tribune). Predictable plotting, stereotyped characters, “an air of desperate contrivance” (Variety). Old-fashioned, improbable plot, and “heavy-handed” direction (Times). Daily Mirror also described the plot as flimsy and “involving unreal people in unreal situations”; it also failed to be funny.

71.246 Waiting for Godot (D, 2a) Samuel Beckett. Reviews: Daily Mirror 21/7/71, 11; Stage 5/8/71, 14. Comment: Performed by an all-female cast. Stage indicated the endeavor was somewhat uneven in its results. Daily Mirror reported the cast was “financing, directing, producing and playing the thing themselves. They have adopted this do-it-yourself line because they feel that if they just sit back and wait to be discovered, they could wait an awful long time. Which is roughly the theme that Godot preaches, in its own obscure way.”

Comment: Observer said the "characters are verbal creations" which do not live on stage; however, Michael Redgrave's final speech was as good as anything he had done; Irish Times shared that opinion. Variety was disappointed with most of the production and noted "there's much muffing of lines by Redgrave." Times listed the mistakes novelist Trevor had made in transferring his work inexpertly to the stage, found the production "sluggish," and Redgrave's performance unfinished.

Comment: Guardian averred anyone who enjoyed the television series would enjoy this stage version. Variety was not as convinced, and, with high running costs for a straight play, thought the production was “patently risk-prone.” Times opined the stage version was coarser than the television version. Illustrated London News wondered “how this particular bit of nonsense had been gummed together ... a world where farce was always jostling melodrama out of its path.”

Comment: A special performance was given for the theatrical profession on 1/8/71. The piece was composed of “sketches of boredom and incoherence, suggesting a general infirmity of purpose,” and “the grotesque figures, the camp creations are used to caricature sexuality and American behaviour,” all with much nudity (Guardian). “Witlessly repellent and enervatingly charmless” (Spectator). A “witless, invertebrate, mind-numbing farrago” (Times). Observer called the piece “an extraordinarily artful, meticulously composed critical portrait of America” and Warhol himself. Variety suggested that “more than anything else, Pork plays like a parody of Warhol and his clubhouse in Union Square, N.Y.” Daily Mirror reported cuts had already been made because of possible legal jeopardy. Comment: MPS 331. National Theatre. Guardian said Jonathan Miller's production converted the clashes among the French revolutionaries "from passionate, noisy polemic into a statuesque expressionistic dream." Variety complained the production consisted of "incessant talk or speechifying in a series of set pieces" which would appeal to the intellect; the acting was strong, with Christopher Plummer "impressive." "A play full of revolutionary fire ... has here been translated into a huge intellectual exercise of ploy and counter-plot" (Tribune). Times thought Miller's "cool, analytical production" had merit, although at the expense of the play's passionate elements; Plummer's performance was rather unconvincing. The production remained in repertory until 27/11/71.

Comment: The play had been rewritten and recast, with "Alec Guinness as the father is ripe for all superlatives" (Guardian). Spectator said the revised play was an improvement in focusing more tightly on the father. In addition to praising Guinness, Variety noted the "excellent support" from Jeremy Brett. While Times (5/8) acknowledged Guinness's scrupulous performance, it preferred Mark Dignam's original creation of the role because it left people "feeling you had met the man."

Comment: Prospect Theatre Company. The production ran nearly four hours. "A good, working Hamlet: straightforward and adequate, but with no special inspiration" (Observer). Spectator admired Ian McKellen's Hamlet, especially because the production used the "traditional Second Quarto order of soliloquies." McKellen "has intelligence, aspect, voice and, in general, phrasing. What he lacks yet is the quality that can raise water on the spine as an actor enters" (Illustrated London News). Christian Science Monitor complained there were far too many productions of Hamlet and saw no need for more, especially this "nondescript" one from McKellen. Tribune also noted its frequent exposure to Hamlet but conceded McKellen's Hamlet "makes a thoroughly intelligent, even authoritative hero." Noting the production had been touring the provinces for four months, Times said McKellen's acting had improved technically but not his conception of Hamlet. "At last, an actor to fit all the many faces of Hamlet. One who has a voice for the poetry and a virility of action ... This exciting young actor makes a habit of breathing life into difficult characters" (Daily Mirror).

313–14; Stage 26/8/71, 13; Times 18/8/71, 8, 7/10/71, 11; Tribune 3/9/71, 15; Variety 1/9/71, 56. Comment: English Stage Company. "One of his finest works" (Christian Science Monitor). Guardian (18/8), however, said the piece was "terse and oblique," and difficult to grasp on first hearing; "but it is a carefully done piece, given cool performances." Observer (22/8) found it "a brave and loving play" in which Osborne appears as a reactionary "because he is deeply troubled by the present and alarmed by the future." Variety said the play was a disappointment with an "excruciatingly slow" exposition; Ralph Richardson gave an excellent performance, Jill Bennett had "good moments." Times (18/8) discussed the possible Chekhovian aspects of the play, said Wyatt was "a peach of a part for Ralph Richardson," but found much of the play "deeply disappointing."
